

AGED CARE SERVICES (CHAPTER 12)

- The focus of this chapter is on government funded residential and community based services for frail older people. The main services are: residential services providing high care, low care, and a mixture of high and low care; community care services; respite services; and assessment services.
- The Australian Government provided most of the funding for residential aged care services — $5.3 billion in 2005-06 (p. 12.9). Total national expenditure on the Home and Community Care (HACC) program was $1.4 billion in 2005-06. Australian, State and Territory governments jointly fund the HACC program, with the Australian Government contributing approximately 60.9 per cent and State and Territory governments funding the remainder. The Community Aged Care Package (CACP) program is funded by the Australian Government, which spent $356.6 million on the program in 2005-06. National expenditure by the Department of Veterans' Affairs during 2005-06 on the Veterans' Home Care program was $91.4 million (p. 12.15).
- Nationally, there were 163 468 places (excluding flexible care) in residential care facilities (72 886 in high care services, 19 293 in low care services and 71 289 in services providing a mixture of high and low care) at June 2006 (p. 12.18).

residential places to demonstrate the impact of ageing in place on the service system over time (p. 12.41).

- Australian Government expenditure (including expenditure by the Department of Veterans' Affairs) on residential care services per person aged 70 years and over plus Indigenous people aged 50–69 years was $2694 nationally in 2005-06 (p. 12.50).
- Nationally, 67.6 per cent of people began receiving a CACP within three months of assessment by an Aged Care Assessment Team (p. 12.36).
- The number of complaints registered per 1000 residents in 2005-06 was 8.4 nationally (p. 12.45).

Progress since the 2006 Report

A number of additions and improvements have been made to the chapter this year, including:

- provision of information on the Transition Care Program
- reporting of expenditure by jurisdiction on the National Respite for Carers Program.
