

Excuse the cynicism, but where will our effort in giving submissions end up? Either in the WPB or shredder, or in some complicated form of SIP with more paperwork, but most likely it will go the way of the much acclaimed Relative Value Study. The profession put a lot of effort into submitting the paperwork and then the Government conveniently said "forget it".

The best thing to do is get out of General Practice and say to the Govt, you had your chance to improve things and drove us out.

That is my submission, I would like it to go to the Minister for Health via Brendan Nelson, who has the honesty not to pretend to consult teachers about their future, whilst we are being fed the illusion that "they" care. I wish you well in the difficult job anyone has in dealing with Government.

Kind regards

TIMOTHY BEGBIE

Excuse the cynicism, but where will our effort in giving submissions end up? Either in the WPB or shredder, or in some complicated form of SIP with more paperwork, but most likely it will go the way of the much acclaimed Relative Value Study. The best thing to do is get out of General Practice and say to the Govt, you had your chance to improve things and drove us out.

That is my submission, I would like it to go to the Minister for Health via Brendan Nelson, who has the honesty not to pretend to consult teachers about their future, whilst we are being fed the illusion that "they" care. I wish you well in the difficult job anyone has in dealing with Government.

Kind regards

TIMOTHY BEGBIE