

To whom it may concern

18 January 2020

I would like to voice my objections to the proposal to screen babies and young kids for mental illnesses. I think the society has gone a bit batty that we are now looking for mental illness in babies I mean first it started with adults, then these doctors said, "Maybe the problems is earlier", so they started testing young adults and teenagers . Then that didn't solve anything so they said "Let's go earlier, the solution must be earlier" and they started testing young children for ADHD and now they haven't solved the mental problem and they are going earlier to babies and in Canada they are screening prenatal and the obsession that the reason is earlier, and when this fails will they then start testing mental illness in sperms and ovaries? I mean it is getting that ridiculous and what will they do when that fails?

It is not a solution as they haven't solved mental illness and statistic will clearly show it is on the rise, somebody is getting fooled or maybe many many people are getting fooled.

See it for what is please people. Don't approve or pass anything that will affect the future generations.

B Jane Wills