

Submission of Matilda Butterworth, VIC

Productivity Commission Inquiry into the increased application of competition, contestability and informed user choice to human services

Putting community services into a competitive market place can only result in cost cutting which will in turn lead to reduce quality of support which will in turn cost the government more money in crisis support as people will feel further de-humanised