Prime Minister's foreword

For 13 years, Closing the Gap has embodied our nation's best hopes.

It is an endeavour built on good faith and the best of intentions. There has been no lack of good will or work. But the results tell us our approach hasn't made the progress it should.

Too many opportunities have been missed — to listen, and to learn.

Two years ago, a historic, 10-year Partnership Agreement on Closing the Gap was signed between all Australian governments, the Coalition of Peaks and the Australian Local Government Association.

It is a partnership that demands deeper listening, as we seek to do together what we cannot achieve alone. And, from this, the National Agreement on Closing the Gap was born.

The National Agreement sets us on a new path towards Closing the Gap: one grounded in mutual trust, shared responsibility, dignity and respect — and, most importantly, the genuine experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

At the heart of the National Agreement are four Priority Reforms that will fundamentally change the relationship between governments and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, communities and organisations.

This Implementation Plan details how the Commonwealth Government will contribute to the Priority Reforms, and achieve the targets that will improve outcomes. It outlines the practical actions to be taken across all areas of government to close the gap.

Along with the Commonwealth's plan, states, territories, local government and Indigenous groups will be implementing plans for their jurisdictions. These are plans that will complement each other. We will all be accountable for the plans we are implementing, and the Commonwealth will work with all to build on our commitments, year by year, to make them even stronger.

Every improvement will be done side-by-side, with respect for the wisdom and capabilities of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and an appreciation for their grace towards their fellow Australians.

As we take these first steps on this new path, a simple hope guides us all: that one day, we can say that a young Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander boy or girl growing up in Australia will have the same chances and opportunities in life as any other Australian.

I am confident that with our new partnership based on trust and truth, we will move further towards making this hope a reality.

The Hon Scott Morrison MP
Prime Minister of Australia

Minister for Indigenous Australians' foreword

I acknowledge the Traditional Custodians of the land and pay my respects to Elders past and present. It is their wisdom, guidance and commitment to future generations that inspire all Australians to provide a better future and greater opportunities for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Over the past 13 years a lot has been achieved in addressing the inequality experienced by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, working towards equalising life outcomes for all Australians. However, we must acknowledge that progress has been too slow and we have not delivered the results we should have.

Recognising that all governments had to work more closely with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and that we all needed to hold ourselves to a higher level of accountability, we reached a new National Agreement on Closing the Gap in 2020.

This National Agreement takes governments much further than anyone envisaged when the Closing the Gap framework was first established, recasting our ambitious agenda for change and doing so in partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

This is a paradigm shift that fundamentally changes the way in which we work. Government is now walking this journey hand in hand with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

The National Agreement was negotiated with peak Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations, paragraph by paragraph, page by page and target by target. It clearly lays out the Priority Reforms necessary to reshape how we do our business to deliver on the Closing the Gap outcomes.

Realising the commitments in the new National Agreement will take the expertise and effort of all the parties.

This Implementation Plan is the Commonwealth's commitment to action and accountability against the National Agreement. It will guide and focus our efforts by providing a better link between our actions and outcomes. It outlines the investments we will be making in key areas that are foundational to achieving outcomes over the life of the National Agreement, including those areas which are new, and those that require concerted effort.

The Implementation Plan makes clear that all portfolios of the Commonwealth will contribute to meaningful change. It is complemented by implementation plans developed by each of the jurisdictions that outline their contributions to achieving the outcomes.

Significant work is already under way through the national Closing the Gap Partnership between the Coalition of Peaks and all Australian Governments. This includes plans to strengthen specific industry sectors, progress towards establishing policy partnerships in areas that need coordinated approaches, and sharing knowledge and best practice across all jurisdictions. The Implementation Plan captures the Commonwealth contribution to these commitments.

All ministers, departments and agencies of the Commonwealth are deeply committed to driving forward the actions in this plan in collaboration and with determination, in the same spirit with which the National Agreement was forged.

I look forward with great enthusiasm to what we will achieve together.

Working in partnership

The Redfern Statement was released on 9 June 2016 as an urgent call for a more just approach to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander affairs.

Dr Jackie Huggins as Chair of the National Congress of Australia's First Peoples stated: "It is the first time national Aboriginal leadership organisations have put a united call to an incoming government".

"After 25 years, eight Federal election cycles, seven Prime Ministers, eight Ministers for Indigenous Affairs, 400 recommendations and countless policies, policy changes, reports, funding promises and funding cuts it's time to draw a line in the sand" – Rod Little, Co-Chair National Congress of Australia's First Peoples.

On the morning of 14 February 2017, Dr Jackie Huggins handed the then Prime Minister, Malcolm Turnbull, a coolamon holding the Redfern Statement at Parliament House Canberra.

In March 2019, the Commonwealth entered into a formal Partnership Agreement on Closing the Gap with the Coalition of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Community-Controlled Organisations (the Coalition of Peaks) and all Australian governments to establish a new national approach to Closing the Gap.

In July 2020, all Australian governments and the Coalition of Peaks together signed the new National Agreement on Closing the Gap (National Agreement). This was the first of its kind – never before had Australian governments entered into a National Partnership with a cross section of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peak community-controlled organisations.

The National Agreement commits all Australian governments to changing how they work with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. It recognises that achieving the aspirations of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people can only be done when we work in genuine partnership and share decision-making on policies and programs. The Commonwealth is committed to changing how it works to achieve better outcomes on the ground with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Since the National Agreement was signed, the Commonwealth has taken concrete steps to establish partnerships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to develop solutions that work and enable shared decision-making processes. Everything we do under the National Agreement is done in partnership.

Closing the Gap Partnership

The Closing the Gap Partnership reflects a new model of working together where all governments work with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders with an increased level of accountability on all parties for the achievement of outcomes. The Minister for Indigenous Australians represents the Commonwealth in the Closing the Gap Partnership and is Co-Chair of the Joint Council on Closing the Gap (Joint Council) with Ms Patricia Turner AM, Lead Convenor of the Coalition of Peaks. The Commonwealth, through the National Indigenous Australians Agency (NIAA), supports the Minister in this role and coordinates across the Commonwealth to enable the Minister to effectively represent the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth provides secretariat support to the Joint Council and the governance architecture that sits underneath it, including the officials-level Partnership Working Group, Drafting Group and subject-matter specific working groups (see Figure 1). The Commonwealth's role is to support the Joint Council to have effective meetings and a forward agenda that is well organised, purposeful, and supports delivery of the commitments under the National Agreement.

The Commonwealth provides funding to the Coalition of Peaks to enable its participation in the Partnership. This funding enables the Coalition of Peaks to deliver a secretariat and policy coordination function to its member organisations. Additional funding has been provided by the Commonwealth for specific actions to be undertaken by the Peaks, such as the engagement process with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people held in late 2019 to inform the development of the National Agreement. The Commonwealth is committing an additional $10 million over four years from 2021-22 to continue and increase funding support for the Coalition of Peaks to enable its participation in Closing the Gap.

Purpose of this Implementation Plan

This Implementation Plan sets out the actions the Commonwealth is taking to drive and embed real and positive change and how the Commonwealth will contribute to realising the ambition of the National Agreement. This is the first Implementation Plan. It establishes a strong foundation for the Commonwealth to deliver on its commitments and embed the Priority Reforms.

Closing the Gap is a whole-of-government priority that requires commitment, accountability and action from all Commonwealth agencies. This Implementation Plan is the outcome of collaboration across the Commonwealth, with each agency identifying how it will embed the Priority Reforms and align its programs and policies to achieving the targets and outcomes for which it is responsible.

Chapters on each Priority Reform and socio-economic target outline the key efforts and investments of Commonwealth agencies that contribute to achieving outcomes – including existing and new actions. These actions are included in dedicated Action tables that list in detail the effort and investment the Commonwealth is making that contribute to each Outcome. Some actions have been included under several sections in recognition of the interconnectedness of outcomes.

Partnering on this Implementation Plan

The National Agreement is founded on partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The Commonwealth’s partnership with the Coalition of Peaks was key to developing this Implementation Plan. This relationship is central to the design and monitoring of specific actions under this Implementation Plan, ensuring accountability for achieving the outcomes in the National Agreement.

A Joint Working Group has been established (see Figure 2) to develop and monitor this Implementation Plan. It consists of the Coalition of Peaks and deputy secretaries of Commonwealth agencies with lead responsibility for targets. Through the Joint Working Group, senior Commonwealth officials and the Coalition of Peaks will be able to discuss priorities for Commonwealth action each year, work together to design actions and monitor progress of implementation.

Portfolio ministers and their agencies are also developing portfolio-specific partnerships, where they do not already exist, to drive target-specific actions.

Working with other governments

The National Agreement establishes clear accountability for all governments – for the first time, implementing actions to achieve the Closing the Gap outcomes is a genuinely shared effort across all levels of government. Given different levels of government have different responsibilities for the policies, programs and legal frameworks that help Closing the Gap succeed, it is essential that all governments are part of this national effort. An increased focus on partnership, transparency and accountability will mean we can see a clearer picture of how actions are achieving outcomes. To ensure this, each jurisdiction is designing and leading its own implementation plans, separate to this Commonwealth Implementation Plan, in partnership with local governments and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders.

While the Commonwealth’s primary role is to implement actions at the national level, it also plays an influencing and supporting role with other government parties to drive systems change and long-term outcomes. The Joint Council on Closing the Gap provides a mechanism for all government parties to engage and maintain open dialogue on delivery and implementation of the National Agreement. The Joint Council will be critical to ensuring shared accountability among all governments for achieving outcomes. The Commonwealth is continuing to engage with states and territories to consider changes and reforms relevant to each outcome within portfolios, such as specific ministerial meetings.

Making a difference

Achieving the outcomes envisaged in the National Agreement will require a significant change in how Government works at all levels. This change will be achieved by implementing the systemic reforms outlined in the Priority Reforms.

Like previous efforts on Closing the Gap, socio-economic targets have been set to measure whether efforts are making a difference. But new to this National Agreement is identifying the drivers that need to be addressed to meet each target. By targeting effort on these drivers, in line with what each level of government is responsible for and with a rigorous reporting and monitoring system, there is greater chance of progress on these targets.

The National Agreement enables more comprehensive and transparent reporting and tracking of outcomes, including at a jurisdictional and regional level. Every three years the Productivity Commission will undertake a comprehensive review of progress of the National Agreement, in addition to an annual data compilation report and a live data dashboard. This review will be complemented by an independent Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-led review the year after each Productivity Commission review. These reviews will enable a clearer and more granular picture of where improvements are being made and where they are lagging, including for particular cohorts of people or locations. These will help shape all governments' efforts, informing measures and actions needed to ensure progress across the board.

This Implementation Plan is a first step towards creating a clearer connection between the actions the Commonwealth is taking and how those actions contribute to achieving the outcomes and the Priority Reforms. The Action tables map the Commonwealth's actions against the drivers identified for each target. The drivers represent the theory of change for achieving the target. Not all drivers of change are captured as indicators under each target due to gaps in evidence and available data. The Data Development Plan which is being developed for Joint Council consideration by July 2022 seeks to address many of these gaps.

Building a clear picture of our efforts will help to ensure they are effectively targeted, address gaps in our service delivery, and ensure clear accountability for outcomes. The Commonwealth is working towards establishing structural changes and mechanisms to embed change across Commonwealth portfolios in line with the Priority Reforms, rather than focusing solely on initiatives specific to the Indigenous Australians portfolio.

Accountability, monitoring and reporting on progress

This Implementation Plan is a live document that will be updated through an annual reporting process. Annual reports will update on delivery and achievements in the preceding year and set priorities for action over the coming year.

The Commonwealth will draw on the Productivity Commission's data and analysis and the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-led review as evidence of where effort needs to be directed, in line with the Commonwealth's policy and program responsibilities.

Commonwealth portfolio ministers have responsibility for progressing actions against the outcomes and targets that sit within their portfolio, in close consultation with other relevant ministers. The Minister for Indigenous Australians, supported by the NIAA, is responsible for coordinating the delivery of the Commonwealth's Implementation Plan and Annual Reports, as well as leading the implementation of the Priority Reforms across the Commonwealth.

Structures across the Commonwealth have been established (including an Interdepartmental Committee and the Joint Working Group) to facilitate dialogue and coordination between agencies (see Figure 2). More detail on the Commonwealth's approach to embedding strong accountability, monitoring and reporting mechanisms is outlined in the How this Implementation Plan will work in practice section.

Priority Reforms

Embedding the Priority Reforms in the way Government works

At the heart of the National Agreement lie four Priority Reforms. The Priority Reforms articulate a program of reform to transform how governments work with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, and through this achieve better outcomes. The four Priority Reforms commit governments to:

1. building and strengthening structures that empower Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to share decision-making authority with governments to accelerate policy and place-based progress against Closing the Gap
2. building formal Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled sectors to deliver services to support Closing the Gap
3. systemic and structural transformation of mainstream government organisations to improve accountability and respond to the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and
4. sharing access to location specific data and information to enable Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations and communities to obtain a comprehensive picture of what is happening in their communities and make decisions about their futures.

The Commonwealth is taking action to deliver these Priority Reforms, acknowledging that genuine transformative change will take time. This first Implementation Plan paves the way forward and puts in place the initial actions that will deliver long-term change across the Commonwealth.

The Priority Reforms include Partnership Actions which are specific commitments under the National Agreement that are delivered in partnership by all parties. They also include Jurisdictional Actions that require each party to take action and report on how it is bringing into effect the commitment to transformation under each Priority Reform.

Priority Reform One: Partnership and shared decision-making

Outcome: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are empowered to share decision-making authority with governments to accelerate policy and place-based progress on Closing the Gap through formal partnership arrangements.

Target: There will be formal partnership arrangements to support Closing the Gap in place between Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and governments in each state and territory enshrining agreed joint decision-making roles and responsibilities and where Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have chosen their own representatives.

Partnership and shared decision-making are foundational to the National Agreement. The Commonwealth provides support to give practical effect to the Partnership Agreement on Closing the Gap through delivering a secretariat function for the Joint Council on Closing the Gap and supporting the Coalition of Peaks to have their own secretariat and coordination function.

The Commonwealth has established separate governance structures for the Coalition of Peaks to work with senior Commonwealth officials to develop and monitor the Commonwealth Implementation Plan. The Commonwealth is also continuing to work in partnership with other Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders where relevant. Partnership and shared decision-making arrangements relevant to each of the socioeconomic targets are highlighted in the Outcomes and targets section of this Implementation Plan.

Partnership actions

The National Agreement commits all parties to jointly establish joined-up approaches in five priority policy areas, in partnership with states and territories and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives by 2022. The five priority policy areas are justice (adult and youth incarceration), social and emotional wellbeing (mental health), housing, early childhood care and development, and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages.

Justice Policy Partnership

In April 2021, the Joint Council on Closing the Gap agreed to a proposal by the Commonwealth and the Coalition of Peaks to accelerate the establishment of the Justice Policy Partnership from 2022 to commence in 2021 in recognition of the enduring nature of this issue and collaborative effort required to achieve the targets. To enable this critical work, the Commonwealth has committed up to $7.6 million over three years to directly support the Justice Policy Partnership. This funding includes support for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations and experts to participate in the Justice Policy Partnership, as well as resources for secretariat and policy support functions across NIAA and the Attorney-General's Department.

Place-based partnerships

The National Agreement commits all parties to jointly establish six place-based partnerships to focus on implementation of the National Agreement at the regional or local level. The selection of these locations will occur through jurisdictional shared decision-making processes including relevant states or territories, local government and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, as well as the Commonwealth through NIAA Regional Managers. The Commonwealth is supporting this engagement process by ensuring that the scope and implementation of place-based partnerships are in line with the strong partnership elements outlined in the National Agreement. This includes building on existing place-based approaches that align with community aspirations. Locations will be considered by Joint Council by November 2021 with partnerships to be in place by 2024.

Commonwealth actions

The Commonwealth has committed a further $10 million over four years from 2021-22 to continue and increase funding support for the Coalition of Peaks to ensure it has the capacity to effectively engage and participate in Closing the Gap governance mechanisms, including the Joint Council on Closing the Gap. This funding gives life to the Commonwealth's commitment to work in partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people on Closing the Gap. The Commonwealth will be drawing on its established partnership with the Coalition of Peaks to partner directly on the development and monitoring of this Implementation Plan.

Partnership and shared decision-making framework

The Commonwealth will develop a partnership and shared decision-making framework to support best practice across all portfolios in establishing and strengthening partnerships and shared decision-making with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The NIAA, in partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives, will develop guidance and a suite of support materials to enable agencies to develop partnerships and shared decision-making arrangements in a culturally safe way. This will help embed transformation across the Commonwealth by setting a standard about what good partnerships and shared decision-making arrangements are and providing support to enable these to be implemented in the context of policy and program development, implementation, and evaluation activities.

As required by the National Agreement, the Commonwealth will undertake a stocktake of partnerships in place including reviewing and strengthening existing partnerships. The Commonwealth will work with the Coalition of Peaks around the scope of this stocktake and the review, with a report to be provided to Joint Council in 2022. The partnership and shared decision-making framework will be informed by the stocktake and review of partnerships, which will help set a baseline to track and report on the number and strength of partnerships into the future.

Indigenous Voice

The Commonwealth is delivering ambitious reforms to place partnership and shared decision-making at the centre of all government interactions with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. This includes the Commonwealth's ongoing work with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander experts and communities to co-design an Indigenous Voice. The proposal includes a Local and Regional Voice and a National Voice. Under the proposals, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people will have a greater say in decisions that affect their daily lives, with mechanisms that support working in partnership with all levels of government including at the local and regional level, and providing advice to the Australian Parliament and Commonwealth at the national level about programs, services, policies, and laws that impact communities.

Local shared decision-making

The Commonwealth is also supporting local shared decision-making models to ensure Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people can participate in the development, delivery and evaluation of programs and services that affect them. For example, it is investing in partnership arrangements to support shared decision-making processes across Empowered Communities sites. This initiative supports Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander leaders as they work with their communities and partners to progress local priorities. In Empowered Communities regions, partnerships with governments and joint decision-making processes are continuing to evolve, with local communities guiding funding decisions and strategies to address critical issues impacting their lives.

Aboriginals Benefit Account reform

The Commonwealth has announced the creation of a new Aboriginal-controlled body to administer investments and beneficial payments from the Aboriginals Benefit Account (ABA) in the Northern Territory. Once legislated, the new body will receive an initial endowment of $500 million with around $60 million ongoing funding per annum, to spend on Aboriginal investments and supporting community projects in the NT. The Commonwealth has worked with the Northern Territory Land Councils and Aboriginals Benefit Account Advisory Committee since 2018 to co-design this reform, which transfers decision-making over substantial ABA funds from the Government to the new Aboriginal-controlled body.

Target-level partnerships

All agencies with responsibility for targets are working to identify, establish and/or strengthen existing partnerships with relevant Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders. The Commonwealth has already established partnerships to drive actions on particular outcomes. For example, the Commonwealth is partnering with the Secretariat of National Aboriginal and Islander Child Care (SNAICC) to co-design a National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Early Childhood Strategy.

Partnerships are also in place for the development of Commonwealth health policies and programs through the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Partnerships Forums that support engagement between governments and the community-controlled sector in each state and territory. The Commonwealth has also partnered with the Aboriginal community-controlled health sector through the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Advisory Group on COVID-19. This partnership approach has been a cornerstone of the successful COVID-19 response in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities.

These initiatives are part of the Commonwealth’s partnership approach to implementing the National Agreement and are described in each Outcomes and targets section of this Implementation Plan.

Next steps

Achieving effective and genuine partnership and shared decision-making with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people will require sustained commitment from all agencies across the Commonwealth and all levels of government.

Over the next 12 months, the Commonwealth will deliver on a number of partnership and decision-making mechanisms, including considering the final report on Indigenous Voice proposals and developing the partnership and shared decision-making framework to support Commonwealth agencies to establish and strengthen partnership and shared decision-making approaches. These actions reflect the need to shift both formal governance mechanisms and organisational culture to achieve this Priority Reform.

This is a new way of working for many Commonwealth agencies. Ensuring success will require review, feedback, building trust and accountability. The Commonwealth will use the stocktake of partnerships to adjust and refine this approach. Feedback from Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders, including the Coalition of the Peaks, will be fundamental to growing and embedding this change.

Priority Reform Two: Building the community-controlled sector

Outcome: There is a strong and sustainable Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled sector delivering high quality services to meet the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people across the country.

Target: Increase the amount of government funding for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander programs and services going through Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled organisations.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations, including community-controlled organisations, can deliver culturally safe, effective services. They also provide additional benefits such as increased employment opportunities and pathways for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people into the workforce and into leadership. Increasing the number, availability and resourcing of these organisations provides Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with the ability to choose the service they want to access. This is an important part of fully realising the outcomes envisaged in the National Agreement. Above all else, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australians should have access to quality services that meet their needs.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations are an important part of the service delivery landscape and are essential to delivering critical services across all the Closing the Gap outcome areas. The National Agreement acknowledges that services delivered by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations are often preferred by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people over mainstream organisations. The Commonwealth is committed to building the capability of community-controlled and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations, so that they continue to deliver quality services.

Partnership actions

Sector Strengthening Plans

The National Agreement requires parties to identify sectors for joint national strengthening every three years through Sector Strengthening Plans. These plans will align with the elements for a strong community-controlled sector outlined in the National Agreement, covering workforce, capital infrastructure, service provision, governance and accountability. The Plans will provide a national framework for all parties to deliver on a joined up approach. The initial priority sectors are early childhood care and development, housing, health and disability.

Dedicated Sector Strengthening Plan working groups, made up of government officials from all jurisdictions and Coalition of Peaks representatives, will develop the Sector Strengthening Plans, with secretariat support from NIAA. The Commonwealth will also fund resources to enhance the capacity of the disability, health, housing and early childhood and care peak organisations to effectively engage in, and contribute to the development of Sector Strengthening Plans.

The Commonwealth has committed $46.5 million over four years to strengthen the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled sector. States and territories have also committed $30.7 million to this joint funding pool. The Commonwealth has drawn on its contribution to the virtual funding pool to fund positions in SNAICC, the First Peoples Disability Network and the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Housing Association (through the National Aboriginal Community-Controlled Health Organisation) to lead development of the Sector Strengthening Plans. As of June 2021, work is underway to action a proposal from SNAICC for an Intermediary Services Support Pilot to support early years service providers to deliver high quality, responsive and accessible services. A Strategic Plan for Funding the Development of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Community-Controlled Sector (Strategic Plan) has been agreed by Joint Council, to ensure maximum impact is achieved with this funding. Commonwealth agencies are working with peak Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations on funding proposals for sector strengthening, in line with the Strategic Plan’s funding priorities.

Jurisdictional actions

The Commonwealth has a strong track record of investing directly into the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander service delivery and community-controlled sector in recognition of the critical role these organisations play in achieving outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. For example, since 1971 Aboriginal Community-Controlled Health Services (ACCHS) have come to play a unique service delivery and leadership role in Australia’s primary health system. ACCHS are operated and governed by the local community and deliver holistic, strengths-based, comprehensive and culturally safe primary health services across urban, regional and remote communities. There are now nearly 150 ACCHS operating over 300 clinics. The Commonwealth provides about 80% of funding for primary healthcare under the Indigenous Australians’ Health Programme (IAHP) to the ACCHS sector to deliver these services.

Funding to strengthen the community-controlled sector

The Commonwealth has committed new funding of $154.4 million over 2021-22 to 2024-25, as well as $100 million over 2021-22 to 2024-25 from the IAHP, to fund repair, reconstruction and enhancement of health infrastructure in the community-controlled sector. This will greatly increase the capacity of ACCHSs to deliver a range of services to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australians. Access to quality, culturally safe health services is essential to achieving the Closing the Gap outcomes.

In the social services portfolio, the Commonwealth is investing $3.2 million to review the needs of the community-controlled sector in child and family services, with a view to increasing their involvement in service delivery. This is an early, targeted action that will support a greater proportion of services for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australians to be delivered by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations.

Funding prioritisation policies

The National Agreement commits all governments to increase the proportion of service delivery funding that is provided through Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations, particularly community-controlled organisations, including through prioritisation policies. Commonwealth agencies are working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders to identify efficient and effective ways to progressively implement this commitment, which must be completed by 2024.

The Commonwealth through the NIAA has strong prioritisation policies for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander specific programs already in place. Since the inception of the Indigenous Advancement Strategy (IAS), Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations have been preferenced wherever possible. This means that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations are the preferred service delivery provider or grant recipient in instances where there is equal ranking with a non-Indigenous organisation in a competitive grants round through the IAS. As with other prioritisation policies, the IAS grants process includes the application of usual Commonwealth government standards of assessing quality and value for money.

The IAS has increased the number of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander service providers since its inception in July 2014 from 35% to over 60%. This has led to downstream outcomes such as better employment outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

The Commonwealth is working with the Coalition of Peaks to develop a grant connected policy that will preference Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations, particularly community-controlled organisations, across all Commonwealth grants where they meet all other application requirements, including demonstrating value for money. Introducing any grant connected policy requires a business case, including a cost benefit analysis, be prepared for the consideration of Government, which the Commonwealth will develop in partnership with the Coalition of Peaks.

The Commonwealth is also working with the Coalition of Peaks to identify the best way to implement the funding prioritisation policy requiring allocation of a ‘meaningful proportion’ of new government funding initiatives, which are intended to service the broader population across socio-economic outcome areas of the National Agreement, to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations with relevant expertise, particularly community-controlled organisations. This will take into account the number and capacity of such organisations and the service demands of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and will likely vary across portfolios depending on agencies' and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations' stages of capability and readiness.

The Commonwealth is committed to service quality and offering choice to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to access the services that work for them. These new funding policies will not provide a guarantee of funding to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations, but will provide a policy basis to preference funding to an Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisation where other criteria are met.

The NIAA will in the meantime develop a suite of materials to guide and support all Commonwealth agencies to develop and implement their own prioritisation policies within their existing grant programs and procurement activities. This is to be done in partnership with their stakeholders. As part of these materials, the NIAA will consider including supporting guidance on cultural safety for organisations contracted by government to deliver services to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

As required by the National Agreement, the Commonwealth will review its current spending to identify opportunities to increase the proportion of services delivered by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations. The review is due to be completed in July 2022. It will provide valuable information on the role and value of these organisations in Commonwealth service delivery and opportunities to increase the proportion of service delivery funding to them.

Capacity building of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations

Prioritising funding for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander service delivery organisations is only one half of the solution. It also requires appropriate support for these organisations to take up the funding and be able to deliver high quality, value-for-money services.

The Commonwealth supports Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations through the work of the Office of the Registrar of Indigenous Corporations (ORIC). Under the Corporations (Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander) Act 2006 (CATSI Act), the Registrar of Indigenous Corporations has unique powers to support and protect CATSI Act corporations that are experiencing financial or governance difficulties. Through the appointment of a special administrator, the Registrar is able to prevent the corporations from failing, and aims to return control of the corporation back to its members in better health. This is a particularly important function where the corporations are providing essential services to communities, such as health and housing, or managing native title rights and interests. ORIC provides governance training to members and directors of CATSI Act corporations to support them to establish and maintain good governance and financial management practices.

Indigenous Procurement Policy

The Indigenous Procurement Policy (IPP) has been in place since 2015 and aims to increase the rate of purchasing from Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander businesses. It is a whole-of-government policy that has seen all portfolios exceed their 2019-20 targets of 3% of the number and 1% of the value of accessible contracts being awarded to Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander businesses. An evaluation of the IPP was published in 2019 and the NIAA is currently developing a monitoring and evaluation framework to guide future evaluation.

Jawun Partnership

The Commonwealth also supports Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander sectors in other ways, such as through skills and knowledge transfer. The Australian Public Service (APS) has a formal partnership with Jawun, a not-for-profit organisation that is connecting skilled people with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations in communities to strengthen Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-led empowerment and leadership. Secondees share their expertise and support the organisations and communities to achieve their development goals. The Commonwealth has supported over 550 Australian Public Service (APS) staff participate between 2015 and 2020.

Next steps

The Commonwealth recognises that strong community-controlled sectors and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations can deliver improved economic and social outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The Commonwealth is working to maximise these benefits through strategic investments in community-controlled sectors and a holistic process to critically understand the needs of specific sectors through the development of Sector Strengthening Plans.

The Commonwealth will support and grow Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations by promoting agency-specific prioritisation policies for grants and procurement, as well as progressing whole-of-government options for funding prioritisation policies. These initiatives will grow the demand for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations in the service delivery system.

This will be matched by a suite of supporting materials to support capacity building of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations and the community-controlled sector to meet increased demand for services.

Priority Reform Three: Transforming government organisations

Outcome: Governments, their organisations and their institutions are accountable for Closing the Gap and are culturally safe and responsive to the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, including through the services they fund.

Target: Decrease in the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who have experiences of racism.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and their cultures have endured the ongoing effects of institutionalised and systemic racism for too long. Addressing and eliminating institutionalised and systemic racism is imperative to achieving the outcomes in the National Agreement.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, like all Australians, interact with government services every day. It is important that these services can be accessed without fear of experiencing racism or unconscious bias – recognising that racism and discrimination negatively impact health and wellbeing in several ways, both directly and indirectly. To meaningfully transform Commonwealth agencies, and funded organisations, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people must be engaged in the design, implementation and evaluation of government policies, programs and service delivery.

The Commonwealth is committed to demonstrating respect and understanding of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultures and to celebrate them as a rich part of our nation.

Partnership actions

The National Agreement requires all governments to strengthen or put in place independent monitoring mechanisms to ensure progress on embedding the transformational elements of this Priority Reform. The Commonwealth will explore how the three independent mechanisms already in place can help ensure Commonwealth agencies are transforming and delivering in alignment with the commitments under the National Agreement:

- The Australian National Audit Office (ANAO) provides independent reviews and performance audits of Commonwealth agencies. The ANAO annual audit is designed to anticipate and respond to current and emerging risks and challenges impacting on public administration and informs the public of the planned audit coverage for the Commonwealth sector.
- The Australian Public Service Commission (APSC) seeks to better understand how well placed the APS is to meet current and future challenges and how to best position itself for the future. The APSC undertakes periodic external reviews of organisational capability and delivers its “State of the Service” report in Parliament each year, which identifies the year-to-year trends in workforce participation and capability across the APS.
- The Australian Human Rights Commission’s (AHRC) role is to advocate to government and others for human rights to be considered in laws and policy making. The AHRC supports the Commonwealth by providing training and resources for employers to help organisations embed diversity and inclusion and foster an environment in which discrimination is not tolerated. The AHRC has two Commissioners who work directly on issues that improve Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples’ experience of racism in Australia: the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Social Justice Commissioner and the Race Discrimination Commissioner.

Jurisdictional actions

The National Agreement commits all governments to engaging meaningfully and transparently with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, including by publishing their approaches to engagement with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The Commonwealth already has a number of publicly available policies outlining agency approaches for engaging with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people (see Action tables).

Territories Stolen Generations Redress Scheme

The Commonwealth recognises that many of the issues impacting outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, including health and wellbeing, stem from past government policies of forced removal of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children from their families. The trauma caused by these past policies has led to Stolen Generations survivors and their descendants experiencing worse health and wellbeing outcomes than other Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australians. In recognition of this ongoing impact, the Commonwealth is committing $378.6 million over five years for a financial and wellbeing redress Scheme for living Stolen Generations survivors who were removed as children from their families in the Northern Territory and the Australian Capital Territory prior to their respective self-government and the Jervis Bay Territory. This Scheme will provide practical support for Stolen Generations survivors to address their often complex health needs.

Supporting intergenerational healing will positively impact the health and wellbeing of Stolen Generations survivors, their families and communities. This Scheme represents a major practical step forward towards healing, alongside the additional measures the Commonwealth is taking to progress truth-telling as part of the nation's journey to reconciliation. This process of truth-telling and healing is essential to transform how government interacts and works with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Engagement framework

The Commonwealth will develop a framework for engagement to set a baseline expectation of how to engage Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the design and delivery of both Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-specific and mainstream policies and programs. This framework will provide guidance and support for agencies on when and how to effectively engage with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in a culturally safe way that will be built on trauma-aware and healing-informed principles. This will include enabling Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders to organise and represent themselves, share data and information to support effective engagement, and build transparency into engagement approaches.

The framework will also address the need to engage Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people before, during and after emergencies, natural disasters and pandemics.

It will also enable the Commonwealth to better track existing engagement approaches and deliver on its commitment to publish these. The Commonwealth will draw on its partnerships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations, including the Coalition of Peaks, to develop and refine this framework.

Embedding cultural safety in the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Plan

The National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Plan is being refreshed and will include a focus on cultural safety to align with the human rights-based approach of the Cultural Respect Framework for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health 2016-2026. It has a strong focus on the impact of racism and discrimination on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health outcomes, and seeks to identify and eliminate racism in mainstream settings.

Building cultural competence in key sectors

The Commonwealth is committing $7.7 million over three years to improve the cultural competency and trauma responsiveness of the child and family sector workforce engaged through the Department of Social Services' grant funding, signalling its intention to transform mainstream service delivery. This is a critical area to provide cultural safety for vulnerable families and children so they can access the services they need when they need them.

In addition, the Commonwealth recognises the role of cultural capability in teachers' efforts to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. The Commonwealth has invested $1.6 million over three years (until 2022) to commission the Australian Institute for Teaching and School Leadership (AITSL) to undertake a project investigating how teachers and leaders in schools across Australia can be supported to enhance their Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultural competency.

The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Workforce Strategy 2020–2024 and the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Cultural Capability Framework are the two key policies to improve employment opportunities and experiences for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander employees across the Commonwealth public sector.

The Commonwealth recognises that increasing the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander workforce requires an appropriate monitoring mechanism to track staff experiences of discrimination and racism. The APSC conducts an annual APS employee census, which collects confidential attitude and opinion information from APS employees on important issues in the workplace, including APS staff experiences of discrimination and experiences of racism. The outcomes of the census are used to identify key issues across agencies and design agency-level actions to improve experiences.

Frontline service delivery

Frontline service delivery is critical to ensuring positive experiences between Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and governments. The Commonwealth is committed to ensuring the highest level of service through Services Australia. The Services Australia Customer Experience Survey is designed to identify where service delivery has fallen short of public expectations and how it can be improved. This survey continues to be a critical tool for the Commonwealth to provide the best standard of service to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Reconciliation Action Plans

Genuine transformation requires internal reform. The Commonwealth funds Reconciliation Australia as the national body for reconciliation. Reconciliation Australia manages the development and tracking of Reconciliation Action Plan (RAP) implementation across organisations and governments to increase cultural awareness, capability and safety. There are four stages of RAPs to progress reconciliation; reflect, innovate, stretch and elevate. Reconciliation Australia provides authoritative research to inform the national conversation, including through the State of Reconciliation in Australia Report and the Australian Reconciliation Barometer.

Next steps

Identifying and addressing institutional and systemic racism is hard and complex and requires deep appreciation that trauma has ongoing impacts that can pass from one generation to the next. Recognising this, the Commonwealth will immediately progress the implementation of direct support to Stolen Generations survivors.

The NIAA will lead actions to support cultural and systemic change across all Commonwealth agencies. This includes developing an engagement framework to set a baseline for how the Commonwealth engages with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders, to be developed in partnership with other Commonwealth agencies and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander partners.

The Commonwealth will invest in improving the cultural competence of service delivery in key sectors including the child and family sector and education sector.

Priority Reform Four: Sharing access to data and information at a regional level

Outcome: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have access to, and the capability to use, locally relevant data and information to set and monitor the implementation of efforts to close the gap, achieve their priorities and drive their own development.

Target: Increase the number of regional data projects to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities to make decisions about Closing the Gap and their development.

Access to detailed place-based data can empower Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities. The sharing of data at a regional and local level can inform decision-making by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people for their communities.

Partnership actions

The key partnership action under this Priority Reform is to identify and establish new community data projects in up to six locations by 2023. The aim of these projects, to be funded by the Commonwealth, is to support regional shared decision-making. The Commonwealth is working with the Coalition of Peaks to finalise contractual arrangements to deliver the community data projects, and is working through the Joint Council to settle the details of how these will be implemented.

The NIAA chairs and provides secretariat support for a Data and Reporting Working Group that includes representatives from all parties to the National Agreement as well as key Commonwealth agencies with data responsibilities. The Data and Reporting Working Group:

- provides advice and technical support to the Partnership Working Group and Joint Council on data and reporting issues, including developing the Data Development Plan, and
- gives advice on changing the way data is collected and developed to support the objectives of the National Agreement.

This working group operates in a manner consistent with the Partnership, with an emphasis on decisions made by consensus by all parties, to deliver data commitments in the National Agreement.

Jurisdictional actions

Data access and transparency

The Commonwealth has a number of existing partnerships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations to support data access and use by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, and has existing strategies in place to make data more transparent. For example, the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) Round Table for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Statistics advises the Commonwealth on relevant activities including the Census, surveys, data integration and data governance. The Commonwealth supports Engagement Managers, who are Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander officers, to work directly with communities across Australia to improve Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander access and use of ABS data.

The Commonwealth is developing an Australian Data Strategy which will set out how to enhance effective, safe and secure data use over the period 2021 to 2025. The Australian Data Strategy will explore the contribution of data to the digital economy, identify the Commonwealth's use of data in delivering its functions and set out how the Commonwealth will manage data as a critical asset. The Australian Data Strategy will outline the Commonwealth data system and opportunities to enhance it, including the Commonwealth's settings to support use, value, custodianship, sharing and security of both public and private data in Australia to improve outcomes for all Australians. The strategy will also commit Commonwealth agencies to building and enhancing data maturity, visibility and capability in the APS, and increase consumer awareness, use and control of their data for personal benefit.

To embed an open, transparent and capacity-focused approach to sharing information and data, the Commonwealth is developing specific advice on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Data for the APS Data Champions Network. This will drive a consistent approach to sharing data pertaining to, and of interest to, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with them and to forming partnerships to guide how data is collected, used, reported and accessed. This will help embed the data sharing elements outlined in Priority Reform Four in data projects across the Commonwealth.

Intergovernmental Data-Sharing Agreement

In April 2021, the National Cabinet agreed that jurisdictions will work together to capitalise on the value of public data to achieve better outcomes for Australians. In order to achieve this, first ministers committed to develop an intergovernmental agreement to share data across jurisdictions, which will be considered at a future National Cabinet meeting. This will support the data development work required to show the full experience of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in efforts to Close the Gap.

Regional data dashboard

In 2020, the Commonwealth released a new regional data dashboard to track trends in Australia's regions over time, including specific data relevant to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The dashboard shows performance on areas such as labour market, infrastructure, housing, economic activity, the environment, demography and wellbeing. This will contribute to easier access to and use of disaggregated data at regional levels.

Better Data Use to Support Delivery for Regional Australians

The Commonwealth has invested $13.7 million over four years commencing in 2020-21 for the Better Data Use to Support Delivery for Regional Australians program, which will provide government and community decision-makers with better economic, social and demographic data on regional Australia, including publicly accessible and searchable location-specific information. Improving outcomes for regional Australians requires better tracking of data on the state of the regions, as well as better information for governments and local communities, to make decisions that affect those communities.

Knowledge Exchange Platform

To disaggregate and share data, the Commonwealth is developing a Knowledge Exchange Platform as part of the Indigenous Research Exchange. Its purpose is to make research findings more accessible, more contestable and more usable, especially for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities. The Knowledge Exchange Platform is still under development, and its launch is anticipated at the end of 2021.

Next steps

The Commonwealth's commitment to ensuring that regional data is available and accessible is reflected by the range of measures in this Implementation Plan, including the intergovernmental agreement to share data between jurisdictions and the Australian Data Strategy. Over the next 12 months the Commonwealth will progress these initiatives and ensure that they serve the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders.

Outcomes and targets

The National Agreement includes 17 socio-economic outcome areas that will make the greatest difference in achieving positive life outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The outcomes take into account the accumulated life experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and their socio-economic wellbeing, as well as their cultural identity and the need for intergenerational healing.

The targets have been developed to measure these outcomes. The key drivers for achieving each target have been identified in the National Agreement, as well as indicators which will help measure whether efforts are making inroads on the things that will help achieve the targets. Together, they sharpen the focus of all parties to direct effort and investment to what matters. Figure 3 summarises the outcomes and targets framework established under the National Agreement.

This Implementation Plan provides a snapshot of the Commonwealth's existing actions, strategies, and frameworks that contribute to Closing the Gap, while also highlighting areas for additional focused investment. It focusses on those areas where the Commonwealth has the most direct levers for driving reform. This Implementation Plan, along with state and territory implementation plans, enables monitoring and accountability of actions to achieve each outcome and target under the National Agreement.

Each target chapter of this Plan outlines key efforts and investments that contribute to the broader outcome and the specific target. This is supported by more detailed information in the Action tables. Some actions have been included under multiple sections in recognition of the interconnectedness of the outcomes and targets.

Outcome 1: People enjoy long and healthy lives

Target 1: Close the Gap in life expectancy within a generation, by 2031.

Health is a fundamental human right. For Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, conceptions of health extend beyond physical health and wellbeing, to include the social, emotional and cultural wellbeing of individuals, families and communities throughout the whole of life. This recognises health as fundamental to enabling full participation in life, including the capacity to fully participate in education, employment and economic activity.

Health services that are prevention-focused, responsive, culturally safe and free of racism are critical to addressing inequities in health outcomes. Services must also be trauma-aware and healing-informed. However, Closing the Gap in life expectancy by 2031 requires changes beyond just the health system. To achieve this outcome, improvements must be seen across all Closing the Gap targets to drive better outcomes across the broader determinants that influence health.

The Commonwealth's implementation of the new National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Plan 2021-2031 (Health Plan) will be the key driver for improvements against Outcome 1 over the next 10 years.

Minister responsible

Minister for Health and Aged Care

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

At the national level, health partnership arrangements are already in place to drive collaboration and shared decision-making across policies and programs. These include the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Partnerships Forums, which support engagement between governments and the Aboriginal Community-Controlled Health Services (ACCHS) sector in each state and territory. The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Advisory Group on COVID-19, which is supporting delivery of health care during the COVID-19 pandemic that is locally led, holistic, comprehensive and culturally safe, is being led in partnership between the National Community-Controlled Health Organisation (NACCHO) and the Commonwealth. The Commonwealth also partners with the National Health Leadership Forum to drive outcomes across broader sectors that influence health and wellbeing outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

In line with Priority Reform One, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders have been, and will continue to be, strong voices in guiding reforms across primary health, mental health, workforce and aged care reforms. Partnership approaches, including across mainstream policies, programs and services, and to oversee the implementation of the Health Plan, will continue to be strengthened.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

Consistent with Priority Reform Two, funding through the Indigenous Australians' Health Programme (IAHP) supports the delivery of culturally safe and comprehensive primary healthcare services for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people through the ACCHS sector, and acknowledges the vital role ACCHS play as a core facet of the Australian health system. The Commonwealth provides around two-thirds of the $4 billion IAHP (over four years) to the ACCHS sector. For the primary health care component specifically, about 80% of the funding allocation is being provided to ACCHS.

ACCHS will continue to be prioritised for the delivery of healthcare programs and services targeted at Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. This will include further work to improve infrastructure and technology, to provide support for transition to community control and to address service gaps.

Health services also need to be equipped to adopt place-based healthcare that meets the needs of their local Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander populations, including through telehealth and point-of-care testing. A strong and effective network of ACCHS is particularly vital in the context of pandemics, such as COVID-19, and in response to natural disasters, such as bushfires and floods.

In line with Priority Reform Three, all governments have committed to improving cultural safety across the health system, consistent with the National Health Reform Agreement Addendum 2020-2025. The new Health Plan also recognises the need for structural reform to improve access, address racism and enhance cultural safety across the whole health system.

The newly released National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workforce Strategic Framework and Implementation Plan and the National Medical Workforce Strategy will also work together to build a health workforce that is equipped to provide culturally safe, high quality care across all locations.

With respect to Priority Reform Four, more work is needed to ensure data sharing at the regional level, including the availability of data that measures the health of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in terms of holistic conceptions of health and wellbeing. This includes locally relevant cultural determinants, as outlined by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities. Partnerships on regional data development and sharing will continue to evolve, including with respect to the Online Services Reporting and KPI data that is collected through the ACCHS sector.

Actions

The Health Plan is the overarching policy framework to drive progress against the health targets, including for Outcome 1. Its development has been led by the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health sector, recognising the critical need for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to be involved in the policy development process. It also recognises the critical role both the ACCHS sector and the broader health system must play in ensuring better health outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Primary care

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are also a priority in the Primary Health Care 10-Year Plan 2021-31 and the National Preventive Health Strategy. This demonstrates a commitment to prioritise Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health across health policies – not just those specifically targeted at Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Through the 2021-22 Budget, the Commonwealth is investing more than $780 million to prioritise Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health and ageing outcomes. This is in addition to the targeted funding already provided for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health through the $4 billion IAHP (over four years).

This is also in addition to broader work being undertaken across the health system to improve life expectancy for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, including through cancer screening initiatives, enhancements to Medicare Benefits Scheme (MBS) items (including telehealth) and pharmacy reforms to improve access to medicines.

To address seriously deteriorating or non-existent health infrastructure, the Commonwealth will invest new funding of $154.4 million over 2021-22 to 2024-25, as well as $100 million over 2021-22 to 2024-25 from the IAHP, to deliver new and renovated health clinics and associated housing for health professionals. This funding will be prioritised for infrastructure projects (clinics and staff housing) in communities with the poorest quality infrastructure and/or highest growth in population of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. This will support provision of best practice clinical care in modern, fit for purpose clinics, help attract highly skilled clinical staff and increase employment opportunities for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander staff in Aboriginal community-controlled organisations.

Ongoing funding for the delivery of comprehensive primary healthcare services is delivered through the IAHP, with $518 million provided in 2020-21 – the majority of which has gone to ACCHS. This includes $90 million in funding provided through the IAHP Primary Health Care Funding Model over 3 years from 2020-21 to 2022-23. A further $36.5 million has been made available over three years (2020-21 to 2022-23) for Primary Health Care Service Expansion Funding. Through the IAHP, the Commonwealth is also providing approximately $23 million per annum for sector development through the Sector Support Network.

To further improve access to primary healthcare for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, MBS items 715 and 228 are available specifically for a Health Assessment for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander patients. Patients who have received a Health Assessment may also be eligible for follow-up allied health services (items 81300–81360), and follow-up service by a practice nurse or Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health practitioner (item 10987). The 2021-22 Budget also includes an additional $22.6 million to improve continuity of care for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with a chronic disease through the Practice Incentives Program – Indigenous Health Incentive.

Chronic disease

Investment from the IAHP supports action to directly address the leading causes of chronic disease and death for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. This includes activity to address ear and hearing health, eye health, renal health and rheumatic heart disease. The 2021-22 Budget announced an additional $31.1 million in funding to treat and prevent acute rheumatic fever/rheumatic heart disease and trachoma, to be implemented through a partnership approach.

Investment is being made to improve survival rates from a range of life-threatening cancers, given that cancer is the highest cause of mortality for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. This includes $12 million announced in the 2021-22 Budget to continue to enhance the National Cancer Screening Register, which will facilitate the direct distribution of bowel screening kits to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people through Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander primary health care centres.

Addressing alcohol and other drugs use

To help address substance use, investment in Indigenous Alcohol and Other Drugs Treatment Services will be bolstered under the Indigenous Advancement Strategy (IAS) by $66 million over the forward estimates. This ongoing funding will ramp up from around $13 million administered in 2022-23, to an average of $20 million administered per year from 2023-24 and will increase access to outcomes-focused alcohol and other drugs treatment services that are culturally safe. Other new initiatives will deliver overdue repairs to alcohol and other drugs services infrastructure, strengthen the capacity of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander alcohol and other drugs workforce as well as improving data collection and reporting. Addressing harmful substance use is expected to contribute to improved outcomes across several outcome areas in addition to Outcome 1.

The Tackling Indigenous Smoking (TIS) program has been funded since 2010 (in different forms) with the aim of improving life expectancy among Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people by reducing tobacco use. TIS is a multi-component program, delivering evidence-based population health activities and Indigenous Quitline support, and has responded to the needs of priority populations, which include pregnant women who smoke and people living in remote areas.

Rural and remote health

As announced in the 2021-22 Budget, the expansion of the Allied Health Rural Generalist Pathway includes up to 30 packages allocated to ACCHS, which will improve health outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people living in rural and remote areas through increased access to a highly skilled allied health workforce. Furthermore, through the Australian General Practitioner (GP) Training Program, the Commonwealth directs $35 million per year towards securing culturally safe primary health care. Funds are directed to maximising the number of GP training placements delivered in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health settings and promoting cultural competence. Annual Strategic Plans for the implementation of this Program are developed in partnership with the relevant state or territory ACCHS peak body.

COVID-19 response

The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Advisory Group on COVID-19 has been a critical partner in preparing Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities for COVID-19. Taking a partnership model has better enabled responses, including community preparedness grants, retrieval and evaluation packages, point of care testing and ACCHS-led GP respiratory clinics, to be delivered in a tailored and culturally safe way. The 2021-22 Budget announced an additional $18.2 million to support the rollout of COVID-19 vaccines to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander populations, including through partnerships with ACCHS.

The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Advisory Group on COVID-19, co-chaired with the Deputy CEO of the National Aboriginal Community-Controlled Health Organisation (NACCHO), will continue to provide advice to ensure the rollout of vaccines is safe, timely and effective.

Next steps

While these actions are important steps forward to drive progress against Outcome 1, more needs to be done to remove barriers to access, including for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with disability, and ensure that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people receive the healthcare they need, when they need it. The greatest gains will come through ensuring the whole health system across the continuum of care is prevention-focused, responsive, culturally safe and free of racism. Ensuring trauma-aware and healing-informed approaches across all care settings will also require workforce training and transformation. Efforts must include partnerships between ACCHS and mainstream services to develop and implement culturally safe and responsive training mechanisms, as well as expanding the capacity and reach of the ACCHS and social and emotional wellbeing workforce. The new Health Plan will help drive this agenda.

Under the National Agreement, health has been agreed as a sector for joint national strengthening through a Sector Strengthening Plan. The Department of Health is progressing this work in partnership with NACCHO, NIAA and state and territory health departments. The Sector Strengthening Plan will be delivered in November 2021, providing a pathway for action against agreed priorities. Implementation of the Sector Strengthening Plan will align with implementation activities for the Health Plan.

Outcome 2: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children are born healthy and strong

Target 2: By 2031, increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander babies with a healthy birthweight to 91%.

Birthweight is a key determinant of infant morbidity, mortality, growth and development, and a fundamental element of the first 2000 days of life, the most crucial period impacting a child's lifetime health, wellbeing and fulfilment. Children who are born within a healthy weight range have a lower risk of dying during their first year of life, are less prone to ill-health in childhood and are less likely to develop chronic disease as adults, including cardiovascular disease, high blood pressure, kidney disease and Type 2 Diabetes. Increasing the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander babies with a healthy birthweight will significantly improve the health of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander infants and children and lay the foundations for better lifelong health and wellbeing.

The Commonwealth's implementation of the new National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Plan 2021-2031 (Health Plan) will be the key driver for improvements against Outcome 2 over the next 10 years.

Minister responsible

Minister for Health and Aged Care

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The Commonwealth through the Department of Health has strong partnership arrangements with the Aboriginal Community-Controlled Health Services (ACCHS) sector for the delivery of maternal and antenatal health services. This includes incorporating partnership models and principles into targeted programs, such as the Australian Nurse-Family Partnership Program. The Commonwealth will continue to strengthen and expand these partnership arrangements to ensure that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are at the centre of decision-making in driving progress against Outcome 2.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

As outlined in Outcome 1, the Commonwealth provides around 80% of funding for primary healthcare under the $4 billion (over four years) Indigenous Australians' Health Programme (IAHP) to the ACCHS sector for the delivery of culturally safe and comprehensive primary healthcare services. This includes funding for maternal and antenatal care services delivered through ACCHS. The ongoing work to expand and strengthen the ACCHS sector (see Outcome 1) will continue to underpin the delivery of comprehensive primary health care services, including maternal and antenatal care, for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families. This directly supports the objectives of Priority Reform Two.

To address barriers to accessing maternal and antenatal care, mechanisms must be implemented to eliminate racism and enhance cultural safety in service delivery. Maternal and antenatal care services need to be designed to provide services and support that meet the needs of their local Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander populations and embed community governance and control. The application of co-design and partnership approaches will be critical in achieving these outcomes, directly supporting Priority Reform Three for mainstream transformation and improved accountability.

To support Priority Reform Four, partnerships on regional data development and sharing will continue to evolve, including with respect to the Online Services Reporting and KPI data that is collected through the ACCHS sector, which includes data on maternal and child health outcomes.

Actions

The Commonwealth is investing in health services to enable mothers of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander babies to have early and ongoing access to effective, culturally appropriate antenatal care, which is a key determinant of birthweight.

The Commonwealth is providing additional investment of $45 million over four years to improve the health of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander pregnant women and babies. This includes support to grow the maternal health workforce and redesign maternity services to reach more pregnant women and support them for longer. Funding will also support an expansion of the health workforce by creating jobs for registered midwives and training for local Aboriginal health workers and other community members to provide culturally safe childbirth support across identified communities of need. This will also include expanding the effective, evidence-based Australian Nurse-Family Partnership Program from 13 to 15 sites, to enable the program to support more women pregnant with an Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander baby.

This is in addition to the already significant investment in delivering culturally safe comprehensive primary health care, including pre-conception, antenatal and postnatal care, and ongoing investment in other effective maternal and child health programs. Efforts are being specifically targeted to implement solutions in partnership with those communities that experience high rates of risk factors for low birthweight births. For example, the Commonwealth has committed $183.7 million in funding up to 2021-22 for the Tackling Indigenous Smoking (TIS) program, which includes targeted efforts to reduce tobacco use not only during pregnancy, but in young women before they become pregnant.

In the 2021-22 Budget, the Commonwealth announced the removal of employment criteria that excluded some privately practising midwives from the Commonwealth's two medical indemnity schemes: the Midwife Professional Indemnity Scheme (MPIS) and the MPIS Run-Off Cover Schemes. This will provide equity in access to these schemes, including for those employed by ACCHS.

As part of the 2021-22 Budget, the Commonwealth is providing $15 million over four years from 2021-22 for the 2021 Improving the Health and Wellbeing of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Mothers and Babies Grant Opportunity. This will support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-led research that translates existing knowledge to ensure Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander mothers and babies have access to culturally-safe care during pregnancy, birthing and the post-natal period. The National Health and Medical Research Council (NHMRC) Targeted Call for Research into Improving Maternal and Child Health in the Early Years is also under development, providing up to $5 million over five years.

To support pre-natal and infant health, the Commonwealth is continuing to work with the ACCHS sector to address the outbreak of infectious syphilis in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities through the Enhanced Response, which includes support for a rapid point of care testing program across 40 ACCHSs and funding for expanded sexual health workforce and programs in 23 ACCHS. Funding for the Enhanced Response includes $21.1 million from 2017-18 to 2020-21 and approximately $24 million from 2021-22 to 2023-24 from the IAHP.

Next steps

Achieving this outcome will require targeted investment in actions to address the key determinants of birthweight, including access to culturally safe and consistent antenatal care, maternal smoking, and maternal experience of socio-economic disadvantage and family violence.

Efforts should focus on those at higher risk of having a low-birthweight birth, including mothers who have delayed or irregular access to antenatal care, live in regional and remote areas, experience socio-economic disadvantage, use tobacco during pregnancy, are underweight or have experienced family violence. Data analysis will help inform the key levers of influence and the geographic regions that need the most attention.

The new Health Plan is the overarching policy framework to drive progress against Outcome 2 (see also Outcome 1). The Health Plan includes a focus on healthy babies and children to ensure that these children are provided with the foundations they need to thrive. The National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Early Childhood Strategy will also drive progress against Target 2 through a focus on maternal health and wellbeing.

Outcome 3: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children are engaged in high quality, culturally appropriate early childhood education in their early years

Target 3: By 2025, increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children enrolled in Year Before Fulltime Schooling early childhood education to 95%.

Preschool prepares children to participate in and enjoy learning through and post school, to build language skills, cognitive, social and emotional skills, and engage with their peers, and for parents, aunties, uncles, grandparents and carers to feel confident and empowered to guide and support their children's learning and development. To achieve this Outcome, coordinated whole-of-government effort and investment is required in partnership with families, communities, services and the non-government sector. To build trust, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families also need early childhood education and care delivered in a culturally inclusive and safe way.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The Commonwealth has existing partnership arrangements with SNAICC for the development of national frameworks and strategies relating to children, including the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Early Childhood Strategy.

In addition, the Commonwealth Department of Education, Skills and Employment has established a new Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Advisory Group which includes representatives from Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander early childhood education and care services and peak bodies, that reports to the Early Childhood Education and Care Reference Group (ECECRG). The ECECRG provides a key consultation and engagement mechanism for the Department with the early education and care sector.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

Solutions need to focus on building Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander engagement with early childhood education and care services, lifting the cultural competency of staff, ensuring services are culturally appropriate, and offering wrap-around services, as well as addressing issues that currently undermine Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families' trust in Commonwealth services.

The Commonwealth will continue to work in partnership with SNAICC and representatives from Aboriginal community-controlled organisations and services on the delivery of new and expanded initiatives to ensure the programs align with the Priority Reforms and support community-led decision-making and service delivery by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled services. The Commonwealth is committed to ensuring that wherever possible, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled organisations lead and manage Community Child Care Fund (CCCF) grant funded child-care services and Connected Beginnings program sites. A current Communities of Practice program for CCCF Restricted providers aims to build capability through education and collaboration, and by providing opportunities to build networks between community-controlled organisations.

To support Priority Reform Four, the Connected Beginnings program shares data at a local level with participant communities. This includes sharing administrative health and child care data through a digital dashboard that helps assess whether programs are working. Preschool data is also publicly available and disaggregated by age, jurisdiction, socio-economic status, indigeneity and geographic location.

These actions to embed Priority Reforms apply to Outcome 4 below as well.

Actions

Preschool

The Commonwealth provides funding to state and territory governments to support access to preschool education through the Universal Access National Partnership Agreement, under which $453.2 million was committed in 2021. Ongoing funding for preschool education was announced in the 2021-22 Budget. The first four years of funding will be offered to the states through a new $2 billion Preschool Reform Agreement from 2022 to 2025.

The new agreement will include a strong focus on ensuring around 20,000 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children every year receive the full benefit of the 600 hours of preschool education per year. Nationally, preschool attendance of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children is about 14 percentage points lower than for non-Indigenous children.

Details of the new agreement are subject to negotiations with state and territory governments, however there will be a focus on working with states and territory governments to increase the enrolment and attendance of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children for the next four years.

To support these reforms, the Commonwealth will provide an additional $33.6 million to 2025-26 to support the development of a strong performance framework. These reforms will drive further improvements in preschool participation and school readiness with a strong focus on state and territory governments being held accountable for improving participation and engagement of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children.

Expanding place-based initiatives

As part of this Implementation Plan, an additional $122.6 million is being provided from 2021-22 to 2024-25 for a set of interlocking initiatives to lift the participation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children in quality and culturally appropriate early childhood education and care services. Additional funding will support the expansion of existing community-led placed based programs and further trial evidence-driven models of early learning and care to improve school readiness and development outcomes for children through:

- $81.8 million to expand the Connected Beginnings program to 27 extra sites, taking the total number of sites to 50 by 2024-25, and benefiting an additional 8,550 children to support 13,860 children in total
- an additional $29.9 million to expand the CCCF Restricted program to fund 20 additional high quality Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander child care services and to strengthen community engagement and outreach in existing services to lift the participation rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children
- $9 million towards the establishment of four additional replication sites of the Early Years Education Program, a multi-disciplinary model that offers high quality early education and care, infant mental health and family support, in partnership with families and local community organisations and agencies which assists at risk and disadvantaged children make significant early learning and developmental gains
- $1.9 million to trial an early learning teaching model that strengthens literacy and numeracy learning in early child education and care settings and undertake an evaluation of the outcomes.

These measures support targets across Outcome 3 and Outcome 4. Further detail on these initiatives, is provided in the next chapter.

Children's Education and Care National Workforce Strategy

All governments, in partnership with the early childhood sector, are working to finalise a new Children's Education and Care National Workforce Strategy which will recognise the importance for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to work in early education and care services and build their skills and competency to deliver high quality, culturally appropriate learning environments for all children. The final Strategy and Action Plan will be considered by education ministers in the second half of 2021.

National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Early Childhood Strategy

Coordination across early education and care by governments is critical to ensuring early years investment makes the most difference to children and families. The Strategy aims to provide a long-term approach to inform future policy and investment to assist children thrive. It will enable stronger collaboration and coordination across governments, and provide the systems and services that impact Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander early childhood outcomes. This includes supporting access to quality, culturally appropriate, early childhood development, care and education services. The Strategy will help guide the approach to early life outcomes and enable other national strategies for early childhood education and children to consider the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children.

The Commonwealth is also working in partnership with SNAICC, sector representatives and state and territory governments to develop a Sector Strengthening Plan for the early childhood education and care sector.

Next steps

The preschool enrolment Target is on track to be met. However, sustained effort is required to lift participation levels of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children. Targeted investment will need to continue to be supplemented by complementary mainstream and targeted investments from all jurisdictions.

Final details of the new Preschool Reform Agreement are subject to negotiations with state and territory governments. The Commonwealth has commenced negotiations to enable an agreement to be in place by the end of 2021 with funding commencing in 2022. The Commonwealth will work with state and territory governments to establish new attendance performance targets from 2024 and an outcomes measure that will begin in 2025, taking into account each jurisdiction’s different starting points. There will be specific focus on this performance target and lifting the attendance rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children in preschool, with the targets tied to funding. The revised outcome measure will be instrumental in directing Government effort to where it is needed.

This preschool measure will be supported by the roll out of other measures including the new $122.6 million package of early childhood education and initiatives, which are further detailed in Outcome 4.

The finalisation of the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Early Childhood Strategy and Sector Strengthening Plan will occur by the end of 2021.

Outcome 4: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children thrive in their early years

Target 4: By 2031, increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children assessed as developmentally on track in all five domains of the Australian Early Development Census (AEDC) to 55%.

A strong start in life provides the necessary foundation for the years ahead. There is a critical window from conception to age five (the first 2000 days) where, more than any other time in life, children's health and wellbeing, development in language and cognitive skills, knowledge and identity can be positively influenced.

Success in the early years underpins all Closing the Gap outcomes as there is strong evidence about the impact of losses and gains during this time and on-going effect over time. Young children thrive in environments where there is a strong connection to culture and community, families have stable and adequate housing and are enabled to provide safe and nurturing home environments, there is access to quality early learning, health and disability issues are identified and treated early, and children are supported by a service system that is place-based, integrated and culturally responsive.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The actions to strengthen partnerships in Outcome 3 are applicable to Outcome 4. The Commonwealth will work in partnership with SNAICC, NACCHO and other Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders on the expansion of existing programs and delivery of new measures.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

The actions to embed Priority Reform in Outcome 3 are applicable to Outcome 4.

Actions

Meeting this Outcome will be very challenging. Supporting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children to meet all five AEDC domains requires coordinated action across portfolios and levels of government, and involves addressing interconnected socio-economic factors like parental income, employment status and education level. Increased access to preschool and child care will support better AEDC outcomes for all children. In addition, there is a need to ensure children who attend early learning have the best chance of being successful in early learning, and to maintain those gains over time.

Child care

The Commonwealth invests in a range of areas which support the participation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children in high quality, culturally appropriate early childhood education and care. In 2020-21, $10.3 billion in funding was provided through the Child Care Subsidy (CCS), and associated Child Care Safety Net measures, to help families with the costs associated with child care and support the inclusion of children who experience disadvantage. Safety Net measures include the Additional Child Care Subsidy, which provides additional financial support to supplement the CCS for eligible families, and the Inclusion Support Program, which aims to give children a strong start through access to inclusive and quality early childhood education and care services. Through the 2021-22 Budget, the Commonwealth is investing an additional $1.7 billion over three years from July 2022 to support families with more than one child with the cost of child care. In 2022-23 around 250,000 families, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait families, will benefit from this measure.

Expanding place-based initiatives

As part of this Implementation Plan, an additional $122.6 million is being provided from 2021-22 to 2024-25 for a set of initiatives to lift the participation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children in quality and culturally appropriate early childhood education and care services. Building the evidence base of what works in early childhood education and care will enable broader rollout of successful initiatives over time.

Connected Beginnings expansion

The Connected Beginnings program is a place-based initiative aimed at working with community stakeholders to integrate and strengthen access to early childhood education, maternal and child health, and family services to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children's school readiness. The program connects hard to reach families to services and uses a collective impact approach to ensure goals and strategies are co-designed with community leaders and families, based on evidence of what works in Australia and overseas. The program also promotes data sharing and information at a regional and community level, consistent with Priority Reform Four.

Administrative data shows the program is making a difference and improving outcomes in communities since it commenced in 2017, with:

- an 8% increase in the number of children aged 60-72 months who are fully immunised, from 79% to 87% in 2020
- an increase in child care attendance from 202 hours per year in 2018 to 214 hours per year in 2020, and
- Connected Beginnings sites outperforming the national average for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women receiving their first early antenatal care visit at 13 weeks (45% compared to 33%).

The $81.8 million program expansion will support an additional 27 communities, taking the total number of sites to 50 by 2024-25 and benefiting an additional 8,550 children, to support 13,860 children in total. Site selection will be informed by analysis of AEDC data, population and socioeconomic data, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholder consultation and local community engagement. In each site, a backbone organisation will be funded to work with the local community across existing services to ensure children are safe, healthy and ready to thrive at school by the age of five. The expansion will ensure that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have a greater say in how the program is delivered to their people, in their own places and on their own country. It will also support a strong community-controlled sector through capacity building and investment, including a dedicated Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander workforce stream to employ local people.

Community Child Care Fund Restricted expansion

The Commonwealth will expand the Community Child Care Fund (CCCF) Restricted program in up to 20 additional high quality and mostly Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-run child care services, mainly in remote and very remote areas with low or no supply of CCS approved child care. It will also fund the expansion of existing CCCF Restricted services to engage families to increase child care participation and attendance, taking into account higher costs of service delivery in remote areas, training needs for educators and outreach to strengthen community engagement. Analysis shows that there are around twenty, mostly remote, communities where there is a lack of high-quality approved child care, with an estimated 1,200 children (aged 0-4) in these locations, who are eligible for care but currently do not access care. The measure will help reduce barriers to accessing child care including a lack of transport or culturally appropriate services. The overall expansion of the program will benefit up to 3,500 children.

Early Years Education Program expansion

Funding of $9 million will replicate the Early Years Education Program across four locations in Queensland and Victoria, including in a dedicated Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander site. The program supports disadvantaged children to bridge the gap to school readiness. The expansion will benefit an estimated 200 children, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children. The program is a multi-disciplinary model aimed at children from birth up to three years of age that offers high quality early education and care, infant mental health and family support. It is delivered in partnership with families and local community organisations and agencies, to help children living with significant stress and social disadvantage make significant early learning and developmental gains. Findings from the University of Melbourne’s interim evaluations of the original site showed significant improvements for children on the key drivers of school readiness, including cognitive skills, resilience, and socio-emotional development. Commonwealth funding will be supplemented by philanthropic and state and territory support.

An early learning teaching trial

Funding of $1.9 million will support the design, implementation and evaluation of a trial of a new early learning teaching model that strengthens literacy and numeracy learning in early child education and care settings, with a focus on improving outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children as they get ready for school. This measure will be delivered in two selected early childhood education and care services and is expected to benefit up to 200 children and their families, including up to 50 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children.

The model will be designed to complement the broader play-based curriculum, in line with existing Australian early learning frameworks, which are known to have a significant positive impact on children’s early developmental outcomes. International evidence indicates explicit instructional approaches can be more effective for some cohorts to teach specific skills in literacy and numeracy. A US evaluation of explicit instruction found participation in an explicit instruction model and pre-literacy program led to positive improvements in gross motor skills, print-concept knowledge, and alphabet knowledge in 3 to 4-year-old children, with effects amplified for children who experience disadvantage. The trial will draw on this international evidence, along with local expertise on the benefits of different instructional models. The trial will be designed and delivered in partnership with experts and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders to ensure the roll out is culturally safe. Consultation will also occur with state and territory governments and the Australian Children’s Education and Care Quality Authority.

Improving health outcomes

To improve health outcomes in the early years, there are a number of initiatives underway. The Health Plan has a focus on healthy babies and children (see Outcome 1). The NHMRC is providing approximately $6 million over five years, beginning in 2019, for four research grants funded through their Targeted Call for Research into Nutrition in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander People. The NHMRC is also developing a Targeted Call for Research into Improving Maternal and Child Health in the Early Years, providing up to $5 million over five years, which is expected to open in late 2021.

Next steps

A comprehensive, coordinated approach is required to support the development of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children in their early years. New initiatives will work together ensuring maximum participation is met with the best possible models to help children and families address childhood development delays, and will establish a critical foundation for children to get ahead in early childhood and stay ahead in school and beyond.

Formal partnerships with peak bodies, researchers, philanthropy, state and territory governments and other key Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders will inform the expansion of Connected Beginnings and approach to the selection of future sites. Once potential sites are identified, a grant process will be undertaken in early 2022 to identify local backbone organisations to manage the program at the local level. Scoping for new CCCF Restricted sites will also be informed by consultation and data on service gaps. Once potential sites are identified, a grant application process will be undertaken in 2022.

Early Years Education Program delivery partners will establish an Institute in 2021 to oversee the roll out and evaluation of new sites. Partners will develop strong relationships with relevant local communities and organisations and will commence a co-design process for the design, implementation and evaluation in a dedicated Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-specific site. A process will commence shortly to identify an organisation with relevant early childhood expertise to design the new early learning teaching model. Sites will commence in 2022, informed by consultation with stakeholders.

Outcome 5: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students achieve their full learning potential

Target 5: By 2031, increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people (age 20-24) attaining year 12 or equivalent qualification to 96%.

Education is an important foundation for realising improved outcomes in many aspects of life. Year 12 or an equivalent attainment is particularly critical to supporting entrance into further education pathways and improved employment outcomes. Evidence shows that when supported by strengths-based, high-expectations approaches, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and young people can thrive in education and be supported to reach their potential. To enable this, school environments must be culturally safe and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultures must be valued, respected and visibly present.

While state and territory governments have constitutional responsibility for schooling, funding responsibility is shared with the Commonwealth, and national education policy is agreed by all governments together. While significant progress has been made towards achieving this Outcome, further work is needed to improve attainment of students in regional and remote areas, and to improve the outcomes of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people upon completing Year 12.

Education ministers' shared goals for education in Australia are underpinned by:

- The Alice Springs (Mparntwe) Education Declaration, which recommits all Australian governments to delivering education systems that promote excellence and equity, and includes a commitment that all students learn about Australia's rich Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander histories and cultures and a commitment that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students are empowered to reach their full learning potential
- The National School Reform Agreement 2018–2023 — a joint agreement between the Commonwealth, states and territories, to lift student outcomes across Australian schools — which articulates a set of national policy initiatives and an expectation that parties engage with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people on reforms that impact them. It also includes bilateral schedules with jurisdiction-specific initiatives, including on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander education.

Through the Quality Schools package, the Commonwealth is investing a record $315.2 billion in recurrent schools funding from 2018 to 2029. This package enables education authorities and schools to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students to reach their full potential, by providing funding to meet their educational needs. Funding includes the base Schooling Resource Standard per student amounts, plus loadings for additional needs, such as the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander loading which is estimated to provide $5.6 billion over the same period. The IAS also provides over $220 million each year in targeted, complementary funding to improve education outcomes.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The Commonwealth is committed to working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, state and territory governments and education authorities to ensure Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students achieve the best possible outcomes. The Commonwealth is currently engaging with a group of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander education stakeholders through bi-annual Indigenous Education Consultative Meetings.

The Commonwealth will continue to strengthen partnerships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to support the achievement of this Outcome. To this end, the Commonwealth has provided funding to establish the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Education Council (NATSIEC). The aim of NATSIEC will be to identify and provide advice on barriers to student attainment, and provide a collective and representative voice on education matters relating to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. NATSIEC’s establishment will provide a formal engagement mechanism between the Commonwealth and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander education representatives. In addition, work is under way to establish a new mechanism to ensure Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander perspectives are informing the education ministers’ meetings.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

Building a direct Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander voice to the education ministers meetings will involve working through a co-design partnership to develop an advisory mechanism, with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community representatives.

The Commonwealth will work with states and territories to reach agreement on data sharing protocols via education ministers meetings under National Cabinet, the Australian Education Senior Officials Committee (AESOC) or the Australian Curriculum Assessment and Reporting Authority (ACARA). This is likely to include what data will be collected, level of geolocation, how data will be disseminated, how it will be used and by whom. This work will help deliver commitments under Priority Reform Four.

A focus on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander education is proposed for the work of the Australian Education Research Organisation (AERO) as part of its mandate to support use of evidence-based practices in all schools. The Commonwealth recognises and values the role teachers play in supporting education achievement and aspiration. This focus of AERO will support teachers’ professional practice by ensuring evidence on what works is made readily implementable by teachers.

The Commonwealth recognises the role of cultural capability in teachers’ efforts to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. The Commonwealth has invested $1.6 million over three years (until 2022) to commission the Australian Institute for Teaching and School Leadership (AITSL) to undertake a project investigating how teachers and leaders in schools across Australia can be supported to enhance their Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultural competency.

Actions

Education and Indigenous Affairs ministers came together for an inaugural meeting in December 2020 and expressed their commitment to do more to improve Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander education outcomes. Recognising this, and respective roles of the Commonwealth and states and territories in education, in 2021 the Commonwealth is coordinating engagement with each state and territory, with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander education stakeholders.

Scaling Up Success

New funding of up to $25 million will see the rollout of evidence-based approaches that are successfully addressing key drivers of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander student education outcomes. This measure will focus on expanding access to programs that have already proven to be effective in improving primary school reading outcomes. Expanding access to evidence based instructional and leadership approaches will enable more schools to be responsive to community needs and aspirations.

Building on country boarding schools

The Commonwealth recognises that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students from remote and very remote areas often experience a range of barriers to education success, including limited access to local secondary school options. There are only 21 government secondary schools and 14 non-government secondary schools in remote or very remote locations.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students make up a quarter of all boarding students, and the majority of these are from remote and very remote locations. There are not enough boarding places for all remote students, with an increase in demand of more than 40% in recent years.

To help address this issue the Commonwealth will provide more options for local secondary education in remote communities. Funding of $75 million will be provided to support the construction of three facilities through Studio Schools Australia. Up to 2,080 students will have the opportunity to undertake their secondary schooling on country once the new schools are fully operational.

City-Country Partnerships Fund

A new investment of $26 million will support new formal partnerships between large, high performing independent schools and remote Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander schools. This proposal builds on the success of existing school partnerships that have been shown to be a strong mechanism to lift outcomes in remote schools. These partnerships will accelerate progress toward Year 12 or equivalent attainment by improving principal leadership and operational management, and addressing workforce shortages through teacher transfers. These formal partnerships may take different forms, including providing operational leadership, addressing workforce needs, and delivering instructional coaching.

Next steps

Under the Australian Constitution, while funding for school education is shared between national and state and territory governments, responsibility for delivery and regulation of school education rests with state and territory education authorities and governments. Current trajectories suggest meeting the Year 12 attainment Target will be a challenge, and will require concerted effort on the part of all Australian governments. The Commonwealth will continue its work with state and territory governments on education reform. The Commonwealth has supported incorporation of NATSIEC, and will strengthen that relationship over time. This actively supports Priority Reform Two.

The Commonwealth will work with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities and jurisdictions to ensure that the initiatives outlined above are developed and delivered in partnership. The measures are complementary to existing recurrent funding arrangements for school education, and will build the evidence base to support improved outcomes of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students.

On the roll out of new on country boarding schools, work with stakeholders will continue to identify community aspiration, site selection, need and viability, building on existing memoranda of understanding between relevant organisations.

The implementation of the City-Country Partnerships program will occur via the development of guidelines to support a competitive allocation process to identify suitable schools.

Outcome 6: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students reach their full potential through further education pathways

Target 6: By 2031, increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people aged 25-34 years who have completed a tertiary qualification (Certificate III and above) to 70%.

Providing more opportunities for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students to achieve higher level qualifications significantly improves employment prospects, as well as outcomes in other areas. Further education can be a useful tool for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to achieve meaningful social and economic outcomes at both a personal and community level. This Outcome also depends on gains against Target 5 (Year 12 or equivalent attainment).

The Commonwealth funds universities through the Higher Education Support Act 2003 (HESA). This includes the Higher Education Loan Program (HELP) and Commonwealth Supported Places, and supplementary programs to support students including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. These additional measures include the Higher Education Participation and Partnerships Program (HEPPP), the Indigenous Student Success Program, the Indigenous Regional Low SES Attainment Fund (IRLSAF), Regional University Centres, Rural and Regional Enterprise Scholarships, and the Tertiary Access Payment.

The Commonwealth's considerable investment in skills includes both mainstream and targeted programs designed to increase participation in vocational education and training (VET), including for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. The Commonwealth currently provides around $1.6 billion to state and territory governments each year to support the delivery of VET under the National Agreement for Skills and Workforce Development. While it is the responsibility of state and territory governments to operate and fund their own training systems, the Commonwealth works closely with them to ensure the VET sector delivers the skills critical to meeting the needs of employers and learners.

Ministers responsible

Minister for Education and Youth and Minister for Employment, Workforce, Skills, Small and Family Business

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The Commonwealth has a strong relationship with the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Higher Education Consortium (NATSIHEC), which is a peak Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholder in the higher education sector. The Commonwealth also engages with a number of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representative bodies including the Union of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Students, the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Postgraduate Association, and the National Indigenous Research and Knowledges Network (NIRAKN).

In the VET sector, while states and territories have a range of partnerships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, the Commonwealth recognises that there have been limited opportunities to date for national partnerships and engagement. The Commonwealth is actively considering opportunities to increase Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representation on VET governance and advisory bodies. The National Careers Institute is exploring the introduction of a designated position on its Advisory Board, which was established to ensure people have access to accurate and authoritative careers information and support irrespective of their age or career stage.

The Commonwealth will explore opportunities to establish formal partnerships and strengthen existing partnerships with stakeholders in the higher education and VET sectors and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander student bodies.

During 2021, the Equity in Higher Education Panel, which includes Commonwealth representatives and representatives from NATSIHEC and the university sector, will develop a Student Equity in Higher Education Roadmap, a five year strategy aligned with the reform agenda to drive and support wider aspiration, improved access, participation, retention, success, and completion and better transition to employment outcomes of students from under-represented groups including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The Panel will partner with other stakeholders and peak organisations for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander higher education to co-design the Roadmap.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

Mission Based Compacts for Universities will be negotiated from 2021 to focus universities' attention on the outcomes of the National Agreement and articulate how they will contribute to its achievement. Aligning compacts with the outcomes of the National Agreement can help to influence institutions to offer services or supports to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students, in order to help them to complete tertiary qualifications.

To build the evidence base and inform future VET policy and program development, the Commonwealth will undertake a study on the experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander learners in the VET system. This study will focus on opportunities and challenges for increasing participation and completion rates in VET, including for Australian apprentices, in close collaboration with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander learners, training providers and communities.

Foundation Skills For Your Future Remote Community Pilots will deliver tailored language, literacy, numeracy and digital literacy skills assessment and training in four remote locations across Australia, in partnership with local providers. The pilots will undergo formal evaluation and findings will be shared with participating communities. The information and analysis gathered from the evaluation will help to inform policy design for targeted foundation skills support for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander learners, including future program delivery and funding arrangements and changes to existing programs.

Actions

Improving tertiary education outcomes depends on a whole-of-student lifecycle approach that is culturally appropriate, from early childhood through to graduation from VET and university. Achieving Target 6 is dependent on increasing the number of students who successfully complete Year 12 or equivalent education to a level that enables them to aspire to, choose, and succeed in, a tertiary pathway.

University

In order to increase enrolment and completion rates by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students, the Commonwealth provides significant funding to universities. Focusing on supporting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students who begin study to complete their qualifications is also critical to achieving this Outcome.

A key Commonwealth reform in higher education is the demand driven program for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students in rural and remote areas ($17.1 million from 2020-21 to 2023-24) under the Job-ready Graduates higher education package. From 2021, all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students in regional and remote Australia will be guaranteed a Commonwealth Supported Place at a university of their choice, when accepted into their chosen course of study. This measure provides a financial incentive for Australia's public universities to increase their numbers of, and support for, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. This support is also complemented by other assistance for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students such as ABSTUDY and the Away from Base programs.

The HEPPP now has a funding allocation that incentivises universities to increase engagement and participation of regional and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. The Commonwealth is working with the education sector to design the new IRLSAF (under the Job-ready Graduates Package), which from 2024 will combine the HEPPP, regional loading, enabling loading and enabling loading to allow universities to use their funding more flexibly to support equity outcomes and best serve the needs of their local communities, supporting more Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students to complete higher education. The IRLSAF aspect of the Job-ready Graduates Package signals the Commonwealth's commitment to ensuring Australia's public universities are inclusive of, and provide targeted support to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students, and students from regional and remote areas.

Two of the 25 Commonwealth-funded Regional Universities Centres, the Arnhem Land Progress Aboriginal Corporation and the Wuyagiba Study Hub Aboriginal Corporation, focus on supporting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students in Arnhem Land to access higher education while staying in their community. The Centres, which also provide employment opportunities for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander staff, offer facilities such as study spaces, video conferencing, computing facilities and internet access as well as pastoral and academic support for students studying via distance at any tertiary institution.

Vocational education and training

The Commonwealth provides considerable funding to states and territories for VET delivery as part of the National Agreement for Skills and Workforce Development, as well as directly funding Commonwealth VET programs, including apprenticeships and traineeships, and foundation skills programs.

The Commonwealth is also working with states and territories on a National Skills Reform Agenda, including negotiating a new National Skills Agreement, revising the standards for Registered Training Organisations (RTOs) and developing a VET Workforce Quality Strategy, which will help the VET sector to better support all students, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students to complete tertiary qualifications. These reforms, along with ongoing support for apprenticeships and traineeships and foundation skills programs, including the Foundation Skills for Your Future Remote Community Pilots, will also contribute to achieving this Outcome.

In the 2021-22 Budget, the Commonwealth is investing an additional $20.6 million in the Skills for Education and Employment (SEE) program to increase the number of job seekers eligible to access foundation skills training and ensure access for job seekers regardless of where they are located, including in remote locations.

Next steps

During 2021, the Equity in Higher Education Panel will partner with peak organisations for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander higher education and other stakeholders to co-design the Student Equity in Higher Education Roadmap. Once complete, the Roadmap will inform the design of the new IRLSAF funding model to allow universities to use their funding more flexibly to best serve the needs of their cohorts and local communities, supporting more Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students to complete higher education.

In furthering the Commonwealth's actions specific to VET, throughout 2021-22 the Commonwealth will implement measures relating to the SEE program to increase access to foundation skills training by eligible job seekers, regardless of where they are located. This includes access by eligible Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander job seekers, including those in remote locations. The Foundation Skills for Your Future Remote Community Pilots will begin from June 2021, with training to be provided through until 30 June 2023.

Alongside negotiations for the new National Skills Agreement, during 2021, the Commonwealth will continue working in conjunction with the skills and training sector to strengthen quality arrangements and supporting resources. This will include the development of skills sets and professional development programs to build the capability of the VET sector to better support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. Work is also underway to improve data collection and sharing, including with the National Centre for Vocational Education Research (NCVER), and through engaging expertise to undertake a study on the experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the VET system.

Outcome 7: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people are engaged in employment or education

Target 7: By 2031, increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth (15-24 years) who are in employment, education or training to 67%.

Increasing the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people who are engaged in employment, education or training significantly improves outcomes over the life course, including long-term employment prospects and improved health and wellbeing outcomes.

The actions the Commonwealth will undertake to achieve Outcomes 5, 6 and 8 will also help to achieve Outcome 7. Key challenges to achieving this Outcome include improving participation rates in the later years of schooling, lifting higher education enrolment and completion, and increasing participation in the labour market.

The Commonwealth's considerable investment in skills includes both mainstream and targeted programs designed to increase participation in vocational education and training (VET). The Commonwealth currently provides around $1.6 billion to state and territory governments each year to support VET delivery under the National Agreement for Skills and Workforce Development. While it is the responsibility of state and territory governments to operate and fund their own training systems, the Commonwealth works closely with them to ensure the VET sector delivers the skills critical to meeting the needs of employers and learners.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

There are several partnership arrangements in place, as described under Outcomes 5, 6 and 8.

The Commonwealth will build on existing relationships with organisations such as the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Education Council (once incorporated), Indigenous Education Consultative Meetings, the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Higher Education Consortium, the Union of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Students, the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Principals Association, the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Postgraduate Association, and the National Indigenous Research and Knowledges Network to deliver education, training and employment supports.

The Commonwealth will also draw on other established mechanisms such as Community Advisory Boards and existing governance structures like those established through the Community Development Program (CDP) and connections with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders established through the development of the New Employment Services Model (NESM).

Embedding the Priority Reforms

Mainstream employment services are available to support all job seekers (including young people) to help them find work or engage in further education and training. The proposed provider licensing framework for the NESM will provide an opportunity for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations to apply to deliver services, including potentially as specialist providers. This supports Priority Reform Two.

A focus on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander education is proposed for the work of the Australian Education Research Organisation as part of its mandate to use evidence based practices in all schools. This aligns with Priority Reform Three.

Actions

Commonwealth actions are designed to increase the number of available jobs while ensuring Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people have the skills and experience to take up these opportunities. State and territory governments have an integral role to play in supporting jobs and local economies and the Commonwealth will work closely with jurisdictions to ensure investment at the state and territory level prioritises the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander workforce.

The Commonwealth is investing $1.2 billion from 2021-22 over four years to support disadvantaged young people, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people get into education or employment (including apprenticeships) through the youth-focused Transition to Work (TtW) service. The service has achieved more than 71,300 job placements since it began in 2016. In January 2018, eligibility for the TtW service was expanded to include all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people aged 15 to 24 years. Evaluations have found that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander TtW participants were 5.6 percentage points more likely to achieve study outcomes after 52 weeks than Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander jobactive participants. Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander participants now make up 33.8% of the TtW caseload, with 16,287 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people referred to the service since eligibility was expanded in January 2018.

For Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth who are in prison, the Time to Work Employment Service (TWES) is a national, voluntary, in-prison employment service that aims to help Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander participants aged over 18 years prepare for employment on release from prison, and improve their likelihood of connecting with post-release employment services. All TWES providers have experience in working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and are required to deliver services to participants in a culturally competent manner, tailored to the needs of the participant.

Ensuring access to higher education will also continue to be a key focus for the Commonwealth. From 2021, all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students in regional and remote Australia will be guaranteed a Commonwealth supported place at a university of their choice when accepted into their chosen course of study. This measure provides a financial incentive for Australia's public universities to increase their numbers of, and support for, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students.

In particular, from 2021, the Higher Education Participation and Partnerships Program (HEPPP) now has a funding allocation that incentivises universities to increase engagement and participation of regional and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. The Commonwealth is working with the education sector to design the new Indigenous, Regional and Low SES Attainment Fund (under the Job-ready Graduates Package), which from 2024 will combine the HEPPP, regional loading and enabling loading to allow universities to use their funding more flexibly to support equity outcomes. This support is also complemented by other assistance for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students such as ABSTUDY and the Away from Base programs.

The Commonwealth's ongoing support for VET, providing greater access to foundation skills and courses and ongoing support for apprenticeships and traineeships, and our joint work with the states and territories to strengthen the VET system outlined at Outcome 6, will also contribute to Outcome 7.

Next steps

Based on current trends, Outcome 7 is on track to be achieved. The effect of COVID-19 on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth transitions is not yet visible, but past economic downturns have shown increased engagement in education.

Should Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth unemployment persist during the economic recovery, this may offset any increase in education and training and undermine the achievement of the Outcome. Ongoing investment in youth and mainstream employment services will mitigate this risk.

Outcome 8: Strong economic participation and development of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities

Target 8: By 2031, increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people aged 25-64 who are employed to 62%.

The enablers of, and barriers to, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's participation in employment are complex and intertwined with social, cultural, geographic and economic factors (e.g. access to childcare, educational attainment, health outcomes, incarceration rates, housing, and transport).

Rewarding and sustainable employment opportunities are transformational for individuals, families, and communities. Employment contributes not only to financial and economic security, but also to self-determination and wellbeing. Providing support to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to engage in employment will enable them to enjoy these benefits.

Many Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are thriving in workplaces across Australia, making an important contribution to their families, communities and our nation. To improve employment outcomes, accessible pathways must be built from school to further education and training, and to employment, combined with measures that support stronger labour markets and business development to increase job opportunities.

The Commonwealth has responsibility for the provision of mainstream and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-specific employment services that help connect Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with employment opportunities. These actions will be underpinned by the Commonwealth maintaining macroeconomic policies that help create the economic conditions that support ongoing increases in employment.

Minister responsible

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The Commonwealth has often undertaken consultation with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to inform policy development and design but recognises the imperative to move toward co-design. The Commonwealth will further develop partnerships with relevant Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders to ensure initiatives aimed at economic development and employment are more effective.

The Commonwealth is engaging with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in delivering employment services. An example of this is the Community Development Program which has Community Advisory Boards or existing governance structures in each servicing region. The Yarrabah Employment Services Pilot has been co-designed with the Yarrabah community. The Yarrabah Pilot opened its doors to Yarrabah job seekers on 2 July 2018. It has enabled the community to build its capacity to deliver employment services that respond to community needs and aspirations. It serves as an example that the Commonwealth can learn from regarding building community capacity in the sector, and the delivery of place-based approaches.

The development of the New Employment Services Model (NESM) involved extensive consultation, including with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders, as well as independent advice delivered by the Employment Services Expert Advisory Panel (which also included Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representation).

A National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workforce Strategic Framework and Implementation Plan 2021-2031 (National Workforce Plan), is currently under development and will be finalised in mid-2021. The National Workforce Plan is co-designed, owned and implemented in partnership between governments and the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled health sector. The National Workforce Plan supports the attraction, recruitment and retention of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people across all roles and locations in the health sector.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

As outlined in Outcome 7, the proposed provider licensing framework for the NESM aims to increase the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled sector taking part in the delivery of employment services. The NESM will also improve the ability of providers to deliver effective personalised assistance tailored to the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander job seekers. In the pre-employment program ParentsNext, six of the providers at present are also Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander owned organisations. These support Priority Reform Two.

Access to key employment services data will continue to be available at the regional level through the Labour Market Information Portal. The Commonwealth through the NIAA publishes CDP quarterly compliance data and annual regional data including information on penalties and suspensions.

Actions

Commonwealth actions are designed to increase the number of available jobs while ensuring Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have the skills and experience to take up these jobs. State and territory governments have an integral role to play in supporting jobs and local economies and the Commonwealth will work closely with jurisdictions to ensure investment at the state and territory level prioritises the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander workforce.

The Commonwealth is responsible for various supply and demand-side initiatives, including the Indigenous Business Sector Strategy, the Indigenous Procurement Policy and the Indigenous Employment and Supplier-Use Infrastructure Framework that aim to increase employment of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and stimulate Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander business participation in the economy. The Commonwealth also invests in mainstream employment services, such as jobactive, CDP and Disability Employment Services (DES), which support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander job seekers across urban, regional and remote Australia.

New Employment Service Models

The Commonwealth is transforming the employment services sector. The NESM is replacing jobactive from July 2022. The proposed licensing framework for the NESM includes specialist providers for identified cohorts, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and all providers will be required to develop servicing strategies that reflect the local community in which they operate.

The Commonwealth has announced it is developing a new disability employment support model to replace the current program, with consultations to begin in mid-2021. The new DES model is designed with people with disability at the centre.

As announced in the 2021-22 Budget, the Commonwealth is co-designing a new remote engagement program with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities and key stakeholders to better fit the changing job market and meet the unique needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander job seekers to transition into sustainable employment in remote communities. The new remote engagement program will replace the CDP in 2023. Initial piloting of the new program will take place in up to four locations from the second half of 2021.

Support programs

The new Indigenous Skills and Employment Program (ISEP) will support pathways to meaningful and sustainable employment through flexible, place-based investment. Self-employment initiatives, such as the New Business Assistance with New Enterprise Incentive Scheme (NEIS), helps people, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to start and run their small businesses by providing free accredited training, personalised mentoring and NEIS Allowance (if eligible).

Jobseekers are also able to access support to gain work experience (for example, through Work for the Dole and the National Work Experience Programme, and Youth Jobs PaTH) or move to another area to take up a job (Relocation Assurances to Take-up a Job). Other employment services also support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's employment outcomes such as ParentsNext and Transition to Work.

The Local Jobs Program, which commenced in late 2020 in response to COVID-19, is being expanded from 25 employment regions to all 51 employment regions across Australia. The program is also being extended to finish on 30 June 2025. Each region will establish a Local Jobs and Skills Taskforce, which may include representation from local Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations. These Taskforces will establish a Local Jobs Plan, which identifies key employment and training priorities for their region, and almost all regions have identified Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander employment as a focus area. The Local Recovery Fund is available in each region to support activities that address the priorities in the Local Jobs Plans. The Local Jobs Program will also contribute to progress towards Outcome 7, as a number of the employment regions have identified Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth employment and training as a key priority.

The TWES is a national, voluntary, in-prison employment service for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, which aims to prepare participants for employment on release from prison. All TWES providers have experience in working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and are required to deliver services to participants in a culturally competent manner, tailored to their needs.

The National Workforce Plan will create job opportunities in the health sector for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, support both current and future job-readiness through strengthened training and education opportunities, and contribute to the building of a culturally safe health system to improve health outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities.

Next steps

Achieving this Outcome will be heavily influenced by the nature and extent of the ongoing economic recovery from COVID-19, combined with the effectiveness of supports to help increase Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander labour force participation and employment. On the supply side, the development of the NESM, scheduled to begin in July 2022, is expected to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander employment outcomes in the coming years.

However, employment services alone cannot close the gap and ongoing employment growth combined with improving Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander educational attainment will be required. Consistent with Priority Reform One, the Commonwealth will pursue any potential opportunities for co-design with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people on actions to support the achievement of this Outcome.

Outcome 9: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people secure appropriate, affordable housing that is aligned with their priorities and needs

Target 9: By 2031, increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people living in appropriately sized (not overcrowded) housing to 88%.

Housing is a key determinant of wellbeing, with adequate housing universally recognised as part of the right to an adequate standard of living. Supporting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to access adequate housing underpins other socio-economic outcomes and provide a foundation for progress against other targets. Living in appropriately sized (not overcrowded) housing supports health, wellbeing and safety.

While progress has been made to reduce overcrowding in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities and increase Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander home ownership, action towards meeting this Outcome is important to enable Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to secure appropriate housing.

The Commonwealth understands housing is fundamental to the welfare of all Australians, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The Commonwealth has a number of initiatives to improve housing and homelessness outcomes. In 2021-22, this includes an expected $5.3 billion through Commonwealth Rent Assistance (CRA) to help eligible Australians on welfare pay their rent, and around $1.6 billion to states and territories through the National Housing and Homelessness Agreement (NHHA). Overall, the Commonwealth expects to spend around $9 billion to improve housing and homelessness outcomes.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

Housing has been identified as an area for a collaborative approach as one of the joint policy partnerships to be established under Priority Reform One of the National Agreement. This policy partnership will bring together the Commonwealth, states and territories, and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives to identify opportunities to work more effectively across governments to achieve positive housing outcomes. This policy partnership will be established in 2022.

In addition, the community-controlled housing sector is one of the priority areas for the development of a Sector Strengthening Plan. This Plan is being developed by governments with the community-controlled housing sector and will be provided to Joint Council in April 2022.

To help address high levels of overcrowding in the Northern Territory, and improve the health and quality of remote Northern Territory housing, the Commonwealth is investing $550 million over five years, matched by the Northern Territory Government, to create the $1.1 billion National Partnership for Remote Housing in the Northern Territory (NPRHNT). Under the NPRHNT, the Northern Territory Land Councils have an oversight role over the investment and, through the Northern Territory's Local Decision Making policy, provide for an Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander voice at all levels of housing delivery, from tenants to decisions of strategy and policy.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

Housing is one of the four key sectors identified under Priority Reform Two, building the capacity of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled sector to enable them to deliver housing services. The Commonwealth, and states and territories, have committed funding to build the capacity of the community-controlled sector and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peak bodies will lead the development of the housing Sector Strengthening Plan.

Actions

The Commonwealth is working with jurisdictions to ensure the housing needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are met. In 2021-22 the Commonwealth expects to spend around $9 billion to help improve housing and homelessness outcomes for all Australians, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. This includes:

- $1.6 billion through the NHHA
- an estimated $5.3 billion in CRA to help eligible income support recipients pay their rent
- $254 million on the National Rental Affordability Scheme to improve affordability in the private rental market.

Additionally, the Commonwealth is working through the National Housing Finance and Investment Corporation to increase the supply of affordable housing and increase home ownership rates, and through the NPRHNT to increase social housing in remote Aboriginal communities in the Northern Territory.

National Housing and Homelessness Agreement

Under the NHHA, the Commonwealth and jurisdictions share responsibility for housing, homelessness and housing affordability. However, states and territories are responsible for determining priorities and the type and locations of services funded, including for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. States and territories also make decisions about social housing, including the building, allocation and refurbishment of dwellings. Under the NHHA states and territories are required to match homelessness funding and have a publicly available homelessness strategy. Homelessness strategies in each jurisdiction must address a range of priority cohorts listed in the NHHA, and outline reforms or initiatives contributing to a reduction in the incidence of homelessness. Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are a priority homelessness cohort under the NHHA.

Housing affordability and home ownership

The Commonwealth invests in programs targeted at housing affordability and home ownership for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. This includes the Indigenous Home Ownership Program (IHOP), delivered through Indigenous Business Australia (IBA) to provide low-deposit, low-interest home loans for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who face barriers to accessing mainstream finance. The Commonwealth recently provided $150 million in additional funding to IBA to deliver 360 new housing construction loans in regional Australia. Additionally, as announced in the 2021-22 Budget, eligible Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have access to a range of Commonwealth programs (new or extended) to improve the affordability of home ownership. This includes the HomeBuilder Scheme, Family Home Guarantee, the First Home Loan Deposit Scheme and the First Home Super Saver Scheme.

Further, Aboriginal Hostels Limited (AHL) provides safe, comfortable and culturally appropriate accommodation services to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who must live away from home to access services and economic opportunities. This includes short-stay, health and educational accommodation as well as specialised homelessness services.

Next steps

The Productivity Commission will begin a review of the NHHA in 2021, which will help inform discussions with states on any future housing arrangements designed to support housing and homelessness outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, including those with disability. This review will present an opportunity for stakeholders to provide input on the NHHA, including about whether it adequately addresses the housing needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Outcome 10: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are not over-represented in the criminal justice system

Target 10: By 2031, reduce the rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander adults held in incarceration by at least 15%.

As the majority of prisoners in Australia are incarcerated for state and territory offences, achieving this Outcome will rely on action by state and territory governments, as each administers its own criminal justice system including policing activities, criminal laws and bail and sentencing practices.

Over-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the criminal justice system is a complex and multifaceted issue, compounded by high levels of disadvantage. As outlined in the Pathways to Justice report¹, a range of social and economic issues, including child removal, youth detention, child abuse, substance misuse, family violence, low educational attainment, mental and physical health issues, disability, homelessness, unemployment and intergenerational and childhood trauma are all conduits for engagement with the criminal justice system and therefore contribute to high incarceration rates. Further, the increasing rate of incarceration of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women has particular implications for families and communities.

To achieve this Outcome, the Commonwealth's approach will need to address the contributing factors listed above, along with addressing the specific issues in the justice sector. This includes ensuring gender diversity and disability needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are embedded into actions. Progress towards all other targets will assist the achievement of the broader justice outcomes. Most significantly, progress towards the targets related to out-of-home care (Target 12) and family violence (Target 13) will significantly assist in achieving the outcomes as the drivers of incarceration of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are wide-ranging and complex. Progress on targets that focus on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's health and wellbeing, education and employment outcomes will also benefit justice outcomes.

Ministers responsible

Attorney-General and Minister for Indigenous Australians

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

A strong partnership between the Commonwealth, state and territory governments and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people is key to identifying, prioritising and implementing actions to reduce the rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander adults held in detention. Under Priority Reform One, a Justice Policy Partnership will be established between the Commonwealth, states and territories, and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives in recognition of the enduring nature of the issue and collaborative effort required. This partnership will build new and strengthen existing partnerships and relationships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peak bodies, organisations and mainstream institutions and organisations. The Joint Council agreed on 16 April 2021, to bring forward the establishment of the Justice Policy Partnership. It will now be established in 2021, rather than 2022. The Commonwealth has committed up to $7.6 million over three years to directly support the Justice Policy Partnership.

The Commonwealth is committed to supporting solutions that meet the needs of at risk Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families that build on the strength of communities, address intergenerational trauma and support community-led approaches to healing.

¹ Pathways to Justice - An Inquiry into the Incarceration Rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples, Australian Law Reform Commission 2018

Additionally, the Commonwealth will look to increase opportunities for shared decision-making and co-design in development of policies and programs and other actions required to meet this Outcome.

Actions

The Commonwealth is committed to working with state and territory governments to identify and address the drivers of incarceration of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in their jurisdictions and within constitutional remits. The Commonwealth will continue to develop practical measures to decrease the rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander adults held in detention that complement jurisdictions' actions to achieve this Outcome.

The establishment of the Justice Policy Partnership under Priority Reform One will bring together the Commonwealth, state and territory governments and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives to identify ways to achieve justice outcomes. Alongside the partnership, the Commonwealth is continuing to fund activities to improve justice outcomes for, and reduce the incarceration rate of, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander adults.

Addressing the drivers of incarceration

Many actions outlined in this Implementation Plan address the drivers that lead to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people having contact with the criminal justice system. These include increased funding for Family Violence Prevention Legal Services, Domestic Violence Units, Health Justice Partnerships, Children's Contact Services and Indigenous Liaison Officers. There is evidence that the social determinants of health, such as family breakdown, family violence, harmful alcohol and substance use and homelessness, can be contributory causes to criminal offending.

The Indigenous Advancement Strategy (IAS) funds activities that enable children to thrive, strengthen families and support healing. The IAS's Safety and Wellbeing Program funds measures that aim to reduce the adult incarceration rate (over $261.3 million funding to be provided in 2021-22). These include intensive support for people exiting prison or detention, Community Night Patrols, Custody Notification Services, alcohol and other drug treatment and support services and volatile substance prevention activities. The Safety and Wellbeing Program also supports activities that promote Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women's safety and leadership, improve wellbeing, improve community safety in remote Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, reduce alcohol and other drug misuse, break the cycle of family violence, and reduce re-offending. These activities complement efforts by states and territories to improve justice outcomes.

In addition, recognising the harm that substance use poses and its impact on justice, health and employment outcomes, the Commonwealth is bolstering its investment in alcohol and other drugs treatment services and support by around $66 million over four years. This investment will increase the reach of existing services to be able to support more clients, and those with more complex needs. This investment will also provide much-needed support for upgrades to infrastructure in some alcohol and other drug services so they can continue to deliver high quality services for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Commonwealth actions are aimed at reducing the over-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the criminal justice system by addressing earlier drivers, not just the proximate causes of offending. This approach will ensure that the Commonwealth can contribute meaningfully to the targets and outcomes.

Support for specialist legal services

The Commonwealth continues to fund frontline legal services, alongside state and territory governments. Under the National Legal Assistance Partnership (NLAP), the Commonwealth will provide over $2 billion across 2020-25 (including over $440 million for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Legal Service (ATSILS)) for frontline legal assistance services delivered by legal aid commissions, community legal centres and ATSILS. The NLAP identifies that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are a priority client group to which services should be targeted. Through the NLAP, the Commonwealth is supporting legal assistance providers, including ATSILS, to strengthen data collection to inform outcomes and to better identify and respond to priority areas of need. The Commonwealth also funds the ATSILS peak body, the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Legal Services (over $1.5 million across 2020-25). The role of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled organisations in the delivery of legal assistance services is also recognised in the National Strategic Framework for Legal Assistance 2020-25.

In addition, the Commonwealth will provide a further $9.3 million to ATSILS (from 2021-22 to 2024-25) to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander clients involved in complex and/or expensive cases, and to provide legal assistance to families of deceased Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander individuals in coronial inquiries. ATSILS provide services in urban, regional and remote areas, and therefore, a proportion of the funding will directly improve service delivery to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in regional and remote areas. Ensuring more clients are appropriately represented in expensive and complex cases should reduce incarceration rates of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Ensuring the voices of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families are heard during coronial inquiries, supported by ATSILS, will contribute to identification of opportunities to reform the justice system to better support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Culturally safe family dispute resolution

The Commonwealth will invest an additional $8.3 million over three years (between 2021-22 and 2023-24) to provide culturally safe and appropriate family dispute resolution for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families through Aboriginal community-controlled organisations. This will assist to reduce the barriers Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families face with mainstream services and ensure that services provided are community-driven and trauma-informed. Assisting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families, including those experiencing complex issues to achieve safe and functional care arrangements for children and improved family functioning post-separation, should support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children to live their lives in safety and with dignity. This should also contribute to reducing the over-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and adults in both the child protection and criminal justice systems.

Investment in Aboriginal community-controlled organisations to deliver culturally appropriate family dispute resolution services will also build the capacity of these organisations to deliver services and lead to increased employment for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Investing in Aboriginal community-controlled organisations to provide these services leverages their existing client base and cultural understanding to introduce family law services to client groups that may not otherwise have accessed the existing mainstream offering.

Implementation of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment and Punishment

The Commonwealth will provide funding over two years from 2021-22 to support states and territories to implement the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (OPCAT). OPCAT provides a framework for regular inspection of places of detention including prisons and youth centres, focussed on prevention of harm through early detection and remediation of issues. This one-off funding will support jurisdictions to establish their National Preventive Mechanism (NPM) bodies, which will be responsible for monitoring and inspecting facilities in accordance with OPCAT obligations. This will help provide better outcomes for detainees, reduce Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander deaths in custody and improve the conditions in places of detention, promoting rehabilitation. This funding is subject to negotiations with state and territory governments.

Next steps

The Commonwealth will work closely with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives, the Coalition of the Peaks and the states and territories to establish a Justice Policy Partnership in 2021. The Partnership provides an opportunity for the Commonwealth to demonstrate leadership in achieving Outcomes 10 and 11, notwithstanding its limited levers to achieve direct change.

Outcome 11: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people are not over-represented in the criminal justice system

Target 11: By 2031, reduce the rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people (10-17 years) in detention by at least 30%.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children are almost exclusively imprisoned for state and territory offences, such as public order offences and theft. As such, meeting this Outcome will rely heavily on state and territory government action, as they administer their own criminal justice systems, including policing activities, criminal laws and sentencing practices.

Over-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the criminal justice system is a complex and multifaceted issue, compounded by high levels of disadvantage. As outlined at Outcome 10, a range of social and economic issues are drivers of engagement with the criminal justice system.

Youth justice outcomes can be achieved through supporting positive pathways into adulthood for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children, young people and their families. This involves ensuring those most at risk of entering the criminal justice system are provided the support they need to thrive in their early years, with strong connections to family, culture, community and country, and access to a culturally safe education.

To achieve this Outcome, together with Outcome 10, the Commonwealth's approach will need to address the contributing factors, along with addressing the specific issues within the justice sector. Progress towards all other targets will assist the achievement of the broader justice outcomes as the drivers of the incarceration of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are wide-ranging and complex. Most significantly, progress towards the targets related to out-of-home care (Target 12) and family violence (Target 13) will assist in achieving justice outcomes. Targets that focus on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's health and wellbeing, education and employment outcomes will also extend to benefit the justice outcomes.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

A strong partnership between the Commonwealth, state and territory governments, and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people is key to identifying, prioritising and implementing actions to reduce the rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people held in detention. Under Priority Reform One, a Justice Policy Partnership will be established between the Commonwealth, states and territories and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives as outlined under Target 10. This partnership will also consider youth justice issues.

Actions

The Commonwealth is committed to working with state and territory governments to identify and address the drivers of the incarceration of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in their jurisdictions and constitutional remits. The Commonwealth will continue to develop practical measures to decrease the rate of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth held in detention within its remit that complement jurisdictions' actions to achieve this Outcome.

The establishment of the Justice Policy Partnership will enable a focus on ways to reduce incarceration rates of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander adults and youth. The partnership will bring together the Commonwealth, state and territory governments and relevant Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives to identify ways to achieve Outcomes 10 and 11. Alongside the partnership, the Commonwealth is continuing to fund activities to improve Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander justice outcomes and to reduce the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth incarceration rate.

Addressing the drivers of incarceration

Many actions outlined in this Implementation Plan address the drivers that lead to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people coming into contact with the criminal justice system. Actions set out in Target 10 also apply to this Target.

Early childhood education is a key protective factor for preventing youth offending. As outlined at Outcome 3, government coordination across early childhood education and care is critical to ensuring investment in the early years makes the most difference to children and families. The new National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Early Childhood Strategy will provide a long-term approach, refocus policy and existing investment, and enable stronger collaboration and coordination across portfolios, the early childhood system and, most importantly, for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families and children in their early years. This strategy will contribute to positive change in this Outcome.

The IAS funds activities that enable children to thrive, strengthen families and support healing. The IAS Safety and Wellbeing Program funds measures that aim to reduce the youth incarceration rate (over $261.3 million funding to be provided in 2021-22). These include youth diversionary activities, Community Night Patrols and Custody Notification Services. The Safety and Wellbeing Program also supports youth through-care services that provide intensive case management to those in prison or detention, starting pre-release and continuing post-release to address the underlying causes of offending and prevent re-offending. These activities complement efforts by states and territories to improve justice outcomes.

Specialist legal services

The initiatives outlined at Target 10 apply to this Outcome.

Implementation of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment and Punishment

The initiative outlined at Target 10 applies to this Outcome.

Next steps

The Commonwealth will work closely with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives, the Coalition of the Peaks and the states and territories to establish a Justice Policy Partnership in 2021. The Commonwealth considers the Partnership provides an opportunity for the Commonwealth to demonstrate leadership in achieving the adult and youth justice outcomes, notwithstanding its limited levers to achieve direct change.

Outcome 12: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children are not over-represented in the child protection system

Target 12: By 2031, reduce the rate of over-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children in out-of-home care by 45%.

The Commonwealth is committed to transforming the way it works with states and territories and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, their organisations and communities to improve outcomes and life trajectories for children at risk of entering, or already in, the child protection system.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and young people benefit from having strong links to family, culture, country and community. Improving outcomes for children in out-of-home care is likely to result in improvements in safety and wellbeing, educational attainment and youth incarceration rates. Core to achieving Target 12 is strengthening early interventions for those who are considered at risk of entering out-of-home care to stop them entering the system in the first place, and supporting those who have already experienced harm to reduce intergenerational trauma and impacts.

While state and territory governments are responsible for statutory child protection systems, the Commonwealth provides national leadership, and will work with the states and territories to reduce child abuse and neglect through Safe and Supported: the National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children 2021-2031 (National Framework).

The Commonwealth also delivers universal support and services to help families raise their children, along with a range of targeted early intervention services to families and children. This includes family support payments, child care subsidies, Medicare, employment services, child and parenting support services, family relationship services and the family law system.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

To deliver tangible and sustained improvements in outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children, governments must share decision-making with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. States and territories are primarily responsible for child protection, and therefore have the lead in recalibrating the partnership approach to out-of-home care, so that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children, young people and their families and the broader community benefit.

The Commonwealth, state and territory governments and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander stakeholders have collaborated on the development of the new National Framework to ensure that Target 12 is a key priority, recognising that everyone has a role to play in ensuring Australia's children and young people are safe and well.

The Commonwealth is working closely with SNAICC, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander leaders and experts, and state and territory governments to co-design a range of national frameworks and strategies, including development of the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Early Childhood Strategy and the new National Framework. The implementation plans for these strategies will include specific actions and measures to address the overrepresentation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and young people in child protection systems, and work towards achieving this Outcome.

The co-design process will also inform ongoing Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander governance structures for the implementation of the National Framework, where the Commonwealth is expected to enter into a formal partnership with appropriate Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations by May 2022. The formal partnership will empower Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to share decision-making with governments at a national level, and work alongside governments to co-develop Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-specific policies.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

The Sector Strengthening Plans outlined in Priority Reform Two will support the achievement of Target 12. Through the co-design process, partners will agree how the successor plan to the National Framework will address the over-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children in out-of-home care, for example, how to build the community-controlled child and family sector, transform relevant government organisations and enable Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities to make informed decisions.

The Commonwealth is considering options to improve how it adopts advice and shares decision-making with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities on mainstream policies, particularly to ensure all policies and programs relating to this Outcome are culturally appropriate and safe.

Actions

Safe and Supported: the National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children 2021-2031

In collaboration with the states and territories, the National Framework is the key mechanism for the Commonwealth to address Target 12, with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and young people being a key focus. Aligning the National Framework with work underway for other relevant socio-economic targets of the National Agreement will also be a key consideration.

To drive strategic coordination, community services ministers agreed on 9 April 2021 to four priorities for the successor plan to the National Framework:

- addressing the over-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children in child protection systems
- a national approach to early intervention and targeted support for children and families experiencing vulnerability and disadvantage – this includes strengthening the interface between services across jurisdictions including disability, early childhood education and care, health and mental health, drug and alcohol, domestic violence, justice, housing and employment service systems
- improved information sharing, data development and analysis, and
- strengthening child and family sector workforce capability.

Community services ministers have also agreed that there will be a focus on children and young people with disability, and parents and carers with disability under the successor plan. Disability will be a key consideration when developing the first five-year implementation plan for the successor plan and the disability sector will be engaged in its development.

Consultation and co-design processes are underway to inform the National Framework's outcomes and actions. Importantly, this will support embedding the four Priority Reforms in the successor plan and actions in the two, five-year implementation plans. This includes considering how the Commonwealth can work together to strengthen partnerships and shared decision-making, and build the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled sector.

The Commonwealth is also developing the new National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Early Childhood Strategy that will support children to thrive in their early years across a range of priority areas including safety, family support, education, health and connection to culture. This strategy is being developed in partnership with SNAICC, recognising the critical role Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people must have in the design and development process.

New measures

To deliver on Target 12 in line with the Priority Reforms, the Commonwealth is delivering a package of four new measures to support the first Closing the Gap Implementation Plan.

- Funding over five years to improve multidisciplinary responses to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families with multiple and complex needs, by redesigning service models to effectively respond to multiple and interrelated issues in families (such as family violence, mental and physical health problems, substance use and disability) that may lead to child abuse and neglect. This includes embedding the five elements of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Child Placement Principle in the service model re-design. This funding is subject to state and territory governments agreeing to participate in implementing the redesigned service models.
- $7.7 million over three years to develop the cultural competency and trauma responsiveness of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander and non-Indigenous child and family sector workforce engaged through the Department of Social Services grant funding in prevention and early intervention services in the child and family support sector working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander clients.
- $3.2 million over two years to assess the needs of, increase the involvement of, and strengthen Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled organisations in the child and family sector.
- $38.6 million over three years from 2021-22 for an Outcomes and Evidence Fund to support the commissioning and implementation of outcome-based funding. Proposals initiated by ACCOs (preferred) or other local service delivery partners for addressing the Targets will be sought and assessed, with suitable proposals subsequently co-designed between government and selected ACCOs. If co-design results in a mutually agreed proposal, the Department of Social Services will enter into funding agreements for successful projects. The funding models for successful projects will include outcome-based payments to incentivise service delivery and develop evidence of what works to facilitate transformational change and deliver tangible, improved outcomes.

Child protection

The Commonwealth is working with the community-controlled sector, particularly SNAICC which has been provided funding for a range of activities including:

- the development of a guide to support implementation of the Child Placement Principle
- delivery of workshops to support children and family sector practitioners and policy makers to develop strategies to improve their implementation of the Child Placement Principle
- documenting emerging best practice and successful models in early intervention and prevention through consultations with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled organisations for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families, and
- compliance reviews of state and territory government implementation of the Child Placement Principle.

Prioritisation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Child Placement Principle indicators in data development will continue. The Commonwealth will also finalise the Department of Social Services review of the Families and Children Activity, including consideration of how it could better improve outcomes of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families.

The Commonwealth, through the Department of Social Services, is extending and reforming family and children grants under the Families and Children Activity worth more than $290 million per year. These extensions of up to five years to 30 June 2026 will provide continued early intervention and support for disadvantaged families, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and their families.

The Commonwealth is working with the South Australian Government on a social impact investing initiative tailored to families of young children aged six and under on temporary care orders aimed at successfully returning children to their families. Three centres will be established in Adelaide in outer-northern metro (Smithfield), inner north/west (Kilburn) and south (Noarlunga).

The Commonwealth's additional investment of $8.3 million over three years (between 2021-22 and 2023-24) to provide culturally safe and appropriate family dispute resolution for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families through Aboriginal community-controlled organisations will also help assist Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families, including those experiencing complex issues, to achieve safe and functional care arrangements for children.

Next steps

The new National Framework is expected to be agreed in mid-2021. The Commonwealth, state and territory governments will continue working in partnership with SNAICC, the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Leadership Group and other stakeholders to develop the actions and measures of success for the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-specific five-year implementation plan of the new National Framework. It is expected that the implementation plan will be agreed by the end of 2021.

Delivering the new measures included in this Plan will help drive better outcomes under this Target and support achievements made under the new National Framework.

Outcome 13: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families and households are safe

Target 13: By 2031, the rate of all forms of family violence and abuse against Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children is reduced by at least 50%, as progress towards zero.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children have the right to live their lives in safety and with dignity. Prioritising cultural healing, family restoration and the strengths of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families through community driven, trauma-informed services is key to breaking cycles of violence where they exist.

Control, discrimination, racism and intergenerational trauma are significant drivers of family violence. Over the life of this Implementation Plan, policies and programs relating to family safety will focus on reducing all forms of family violence and abuse against women and children. Particular focus on young people as a cohort is critical given they have their own needs and perspectives when it comes to experiences of family violence, and their experiences are formative in guiding their future attitudes and behaviours.

The new National Plan to End Violence against Women and their Children (the National Plan) will be the primary mechanism for implementation of Target 13. Implementation of the National Plan is a shared commitment between Commonwealth and state and territory governments.

The Commonwealth aims to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women to make choices that will protect and promote their own and their families' long-term physical, emotional and cultural safety to work towards breaking the cycle of trauma and violence. The Wiyi Yani U Thangani (Women's Voices) report, informed by an extensive nation-wide consultation process with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and girls was finalised in 2020. The Women's Voices report elevates the diverse lived experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and girls and provides recommendations, calls to action and priorities that will be used to inform the future policy direction of all targets across the National Agreement, including this Target.

Minister responsible

Minister for Families, Social Services and Women's Safety and the Minister for Women

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

To deliver tangible and sustained improvements in outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families and communities, the Commonwealth will partner with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peak organisations and subject matter experts to guide the development and implementation of strategies to reduce all forms of family violence and sexual violence against Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children.

The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Advisory Council on family, domestic and sexual violence will work in partnership with governments to inform responses to Target 13 and determine the strategies in the new National Plan. The Advisory Council will work with the National Federation Reform Council (NFRC) Taskforce on Women's Safety, co-chaired by the Minister for Families and Social Services and the Minister for Women, with membership of all state and territory women's safety ministers. The Taskforce represents joint commitment of the Commonwealth, states and territories to work in partnership on women's safety, including development of the new National Plan.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

The Commonwealth will continue to progress its approach to developing policies and delivering programs through shared decision-making and in partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Actions

National Plan to Reduce Violence against Women and their Children

Improving women's safety, economic security, wellbeing and prosperity requires a culture of dignity and respect. In the 2021-22 Budget the Commonwealth committed $1.1 billion to the 'towards zero' target to end violence against women and children. This historic investment in women's safety measures will build on the work of the Fourth Action Plan of the National Plan, and ensure a seamless transition to a new National Plan to end violence against women and children, starting in July 2022.

Violence takes many forms including physical, psychological, emotional and financial. The National Plan recognises the different types of violence experienced by women and children and has focused on reducing family, domestic and sexual violence. Measures in this Budget build on the National Plan including improved support to assist women experiencing or escaping family and domestic violence, investments in the family law system, increased primary prevention and education efforts to change behaviours and attitudes.

The new National Plan has been identified as the primary mechanism for governments to address Target 13. The Commonwealth has commenced consultation for the new National Plan which is set to commence in July 2022. The Commonwealth will work in partnership with the new Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Advisory Council on family, domestic and sexual violence announced as part of the 2021-22 Budget, to guide the development and implementation of the new National Plan. The Commonwealth will also work with states and territories to develop measures under the new National Plan.

As part of the transitional strategy towards the new National Plan, in the 2021-22 Budget the Commonwealth is investing an additional $26 million to improve the safety of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women seeking support and legal assistance, including by: expanding the Family Violence Prevention Legal Services program to address critical service gaps; improving the quality and capability of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander family safety organisations; and enhancing the cultural safety of non-Indigenous family safety organisations.

National Strategy to Prevent and Respond to Child Sexual Abuse

In late 2021, Australian governments will release the National Strategy to Prevent and Respond to Child Sexual Abuse, to prevent, detect and respond to child sexual abuse committed in Australia, online, and by Australians overseas. The Commonwealth is committed to working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to implement all measures under the National Strategy to Prevent and Respond to Child Sexual Abuse, and to ensure its alignment with other national policy frameworks, such as the current and new National Plan, and the National Agreement. In the 2021-22 Budget, $146 million in initial funding for this work was announced, including $10.9 million in new funding to co-design place-based Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander healing approaches to support survivors of child sexual abuse. An Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Expert Advisory Group will provide expert advice and oversight of design and implementation.

Disability

In response to the Disability Royal Commission highlighting that women with a disability experience higher levels of all forms of violence, the Commonwealth is investing $9.3 million over three years (2021-22 to 2023-24) to develop resources that aim to reduce violence against women and girls with disability, and improve service responses when violence occurs. Although this initiative does not specifically focus on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and girls, investment in this area will benefit Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children as they experience higher levels of violence and have a higher prevalence of disability.

Data development

The Partnership recognises there is no single data point or source that currently could be used to measure progress toward this Target. Rather multiple data sources are needed to truly understand and respond to the complex nature of violence against Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children. Initial actions under this Target seek to address this. Data development actions under the new National Plan will prioritise strengthening the evidence base by gathering information and conducting research on violence against Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children, and increasing reporting and in-depth analyses on the prevalence and incidence of violence against Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children.

As part of its commitment to data development, under the 2021-22 Budget the Commonwealth will invest $31.6 million over five years to establish the first Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Personal Safety Survey through the ABS. The new survey will be a key primary national collection of family, domestic and sexual violence statistics. This survey will include and identify Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with disability. This will form a significant part of the evidence base on violence against women and children and address the gap in data on violence experienced by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Before the new National Plan begins, the Commonwealth will canvass ways to improve jurisdictional data collection and reporting for better comparability across the states and territories, working towards national consistency where possible. The Commonwealth is establishing a comprehensive data and reporting system on family, domestic and sexual violence. An integrated data asset will involve the sharing, linking and access to de-identified data from a wide range of sources.

Family Violence Prevention Legal Services

The Commonwealth is funding the Family Violence Prevention Legal Services ($17 million over 2021-22 and 2022-23, in addition to the core funding of $75 million for 2020-23) to provide expanded family safety services to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and their families. These programs will address the critical need to expand the program to areas where services are needed but do not currently exist and improve the quality of support through additional non-legal wraparound support to clients and community legal education.

Other supports

The Commonwealth will continue to build on the evidence base for culturally appropriate Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander specific approaches to victim and perpetrator support, including evaluation of programs. Through the IAS, the Commonwealth will continue to fund activities to reduce harm from alcohol and other drug use, provide victim support and improve the overall health and wellbeing of communities.

The new measures announced under Target 12 will also support outcomes under this Target, in particular the measure to improve multidisciplinary responses to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families and children with multiple and complex needs and the Outcomes and Evidence Fund.

The Commonwealth's additional investment of $8.3 million over three years (between 2021-22 and 2023-24) to provide culturally safe and appropriate family dispute resolution for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families through Aboriginal community-controlled organisations will also assist Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families, women and children who are experiencing domestic and family violence.

Next steps

The next steps to establish the first Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Personal Safety Survey include planning discussions between the Department of Social Services (DSS) and the ABS and the establishment of a memorandum of understanding arrangement. The ABS will partner with DSS and representatives from the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community to work through the scope and decisions that will need to be made. The ABS will also review existing processes that may be used from other Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander focussed surveys to make the field collection efficient and manage respondent burden.

The next steps for the integrated data asset include planning discussions. DSS has approached partner agencies to plan and establish the development of the integrated data asset, and held initial discussions. DSS will also identify and establish an agreement with a suitably qualified organisation to deliver the integrated data asset.

The Commonwealth is working with key stakeholders to establish the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Advisory Council on family, domestic and sexual violence.

The above measures will inform the development of the new National Plan, which will include specific consideration of family violence in the context of the experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and children.

Outcome 14: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people enjoy high levels of social and emotional wellbeing

Target 14: Significant and sustained reduction in suicide of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people towards zero.

Social and emotional wellbeing is the foundation for physical and mental health for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. It is a holistic concept that recognises the importance of connection to land, culture, spirituality and ancestry, and the interrelated nature of these factors. Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, families and communities have a right to be socially and emotionally well, and be supported by mental health and other services that are effective, high quality, clinically and culturally appropriate, and affordable.

Trauma-aware and healing-informed approaches must be tailored for diverse Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. This includes ensuring they are empowered to determine and drive care delivery, and to control their social and emotional wellbeing outcomes. Strong, safe and resilient families are key to ensuring a solid foundation for social and emotional wellbeing throughout the life course. This includes a focus on building strong relationships by embedding the cultural significance of kinship, family and community.

Minister responsible

Minister for Health and Aged Care

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The 2016 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Suicide Prevention Evaluation Project Report tells us that partnerships and engagement with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander leaders, Elders and communities is a common success factor in community-based interventions or responses to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander suicide. This ensures that solutions are built on a solid foundation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's strengths and cultures, and promote what healing means to them.

The Commonwealth will continue to partner at the national level with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander leaders in mental health, suicide prevention and social and emotional wellbeing. In addition, the Commonwealth has an existing funding arrangement with Gayaa Dhuwi (Proud Spirit) Australia, the new national Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander national leadership body for social and emotional wellbeing, mental health and suicide prevention. Gayaa Dhuwi is governed and controlled by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander leaders and peak bodies working in these areas, promoting collective excellence in mental health care.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

Consistent with Outcome 1, the role of Aboriginal Community-Controlled Health Services (ACCHS) continues to be strengthened to deliver and coordinate culturally safe and responsive mental health and suicide prevention services for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Partnership with community-controlled health services at the local level will also be embedded to ensure that services targeted at the population level are culturally safe and equipped to deliver responses specific to the needs of communities.

The Commonwealth will continue to work with communities to better understand how the design and delivery of mental health and suicide prevention services can best meet their needs. This includes ensuring that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have a say in determining their own priorities and solutions and have access to relevant data at the regional and local level to help inform decision-making on mental health and suicide prevention.

The Commonwealth is also continuing to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-led and community-driven responses to mental health and suicide prevention through Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander governance at the national, regional and local level.

Actions

National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Suicide Prevention Strategy (NATSISPS)

The Commonwealth is working with Gayaa Dhuwi to renew and co-design the NATSISPS and its Implementation Plan, which will directly contribute to this Outcome. This work will ensure the NATSISPS continues to build on the evidence base for responding to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander suicide, recognising that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people must lead and develop their own tailored approaches to suicide prevention that are community led, culturally appropriate and responsive to community need. Through implementation of key initiatives under the renewed NATSISPS, the Commonwealth will continue to work with Gayaa Dhuwi and the National Aboriginal Community-Controlled Health Organisation (NACCHO) to co-design and deliver culturally-appropriate suicide prevention activities to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities.

The Commonwealth announced in the 2021-22 Budget an additional $79 million to address the devastating and disproportionate impact of suicide and mental ill health on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people through key initiatives under a renewed Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-led NATSISPS, including:

- $27.3 million to implement and evaluate culturally-sensitive, co-designed aftercare services through regionally-based organisations, with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations being preferred service providers
- $23.8 million to support the establishment of regional suicide prevention networks and a lead commissioning officer in each state and territory
- $16.6 million to establish and evaluate a culturally appropriate 24/7 crisis line to be governed and delivered by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The crisis line will be a partnership between Gayaa Dhuwi and Lifeline
- $6.1 million to support national Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander leadership for suicide prevention
- $1.5 million to support a review to examine the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health sector delivering mental health services for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and
- $1.1 million to the Black Dog Institute to work with the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Lived Experience Centre to support the inclusion of people with lived experience in the co-design, implementation and evaluation of suicide prevention activity.

National Strategic Framework for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples' Mental Health and Social and Emotional Wellbeing

Gayaa Dhuwi and the Commonwealth will also work in partnership to develop an implementation plan for the National Strategic Framework for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples' Mental Health and Social and Emotional Wellbeing. This will be aimed at preventative responses to ensure Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are supported before they get to crisis point. This is expected to be finalised in 2021-22.

The new National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Plan (see Outcome 1) will also include a focus on mental health, suicide prevention and social and emotional wellbeing, and align with key policies and strategies already in place or under development.

Funding for mental health and suicide prevention services

Other measures supporting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander mental health and suicide prevention in the 2021-22 Budget include:

- $12 million to maintain local initiatives across Australia at the former national suicide prevention trial sites, including two Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-specific sites
- $30.5 million for a national survey to measure, for the first time, the prevalence of mental ill health in the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander population, and
- $8.3 million to support greater representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the mental health workforce through 20 additional mental health-specific scholarships, and providing training to support healthcare workers to deliver culturally safe care.

The Commonwealth has supported the implementation and evaluation of 12 suicide prevention trial sites in identified priority areas. Trials in the Kimberley and Darwin regions are Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-specific, and five other trial sites have a focus on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Primary Health Networks (PHNs) were funded to lead trial site activity, and are actively engaged with communities, local governments and service providers to ensure that trial activities are focused on local needs. The Kimberley and Darwin trial sites have developed a coordinated and culturally appropriate suicide prevention model that is locally driven and locally owned.

Through the Indigenous Australians Health Programme (IAHP), the Commonwealth is also investing funding to PHNs to administer the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Mental Health program, which aims to improve access to culturally appropriate mental health services for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. In 2019-20, $29.1 million was allocated to PHNs for the commissioning of these services, of which $20.7 million was provided to ACCHS. For the period 2016-17 to 2022-23, a total of $201.6 million has been allocated to this activity.

New investment to expand Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander alcohol and other drug services outlined in Outcome 1 will also support achievement of this Outcome.

Funding for healing

The Commonwealth recognises that many of the issues impacting outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, including health and wellbeing, stem from past government policies of forced removal of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children from their families. The trauma caused by these past policies has led to Stolen Generations survivors and their descendants experiencing worse health and wellbeing outcomes than other Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Australians. Supporting intergenerational healing will positively impact the health and wellbeing of Stolen Generations survivors, their families and communities.

The Commonwealth is committing $378.6 million over five years for a financial and wellbeing redress scheme for living Stolen Generations survivors who were removed as children from their families in the Northern Territory and the Australian Capital Territory prior to their respective self-government and the Jervis Bay Territory. This scheme will provide practical support for Stolen Generations survivors to address their often complex health needs.

The Commonwealth, through the IAS, is also investing funding of over $51.7 million in 2021-22 to deliver social and emotional wellbeing services and workforce development. This includes Link-Up services to provide counselling, family tracing and reunion services to members of the Stolen Generations and support to the Healing Foundation for healing projects.

Next steps

To ensure strong governance, by 2022 the Joint Council on Closing the Gap will establish a joined up policy approach to social and emotional wellbeing between the Commonwealth, states and territories and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander representatives. The Commonwealth will also explore the potential to better target IAS social and emotional wellbeing funding to achieve outcomes under this Outcome and advance the Priority Reforms.

Furthermore, the Commonwealth will work closely with the states and territories to fully realise the recommendations of the Productivity Commission's Inquiry into Mental Health and the National Suicide Prevention Adviser's Final Report. The majority of these recommendations require collaboration with state and territory governments, with a number to be pursued jointly through a new National Mental Health and Suicide Prevention Agreement.

Outcome 15: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people maintain a distinctive cultural, spiritual, physical and economic relationship with their land and waters

Target 15a: By 2030, a 15% increase in Australia's landmass subject to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's legal rights or interests.

Target 15b: By 2030, a 15% increase in areas covered by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's legal rights or interests in the sea.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's connection to their land and waters is central to their spiritual and cultural identity and the wellbeing and health of their communities. Promoting and facilitating Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples' right to manage country and enjoy their rights to land and waters will contribute to social, cultural, environmental and economic outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and their communities.

Approximately 52% of all land in Australia now has a recognised Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander interest (under the Native Title Act 1993 (NTA) or Commonwealth or state statutory land rights regimes). A further 20% is subject to native title claims. There are also 40 outstanding claims under the Commonwealth Aboriginal Land Rights Act (Northern Territory) 1976 (ALRA), as well as other claims under state land rights regimes.

Land and water rights in Australia are subject to different Commonwealth, state and territory legal regimes. The Commonwealth's actions complement the actions of the states and territories. The states and territories are generally the primary respondents to native title determination applications and also lead on land claims and grants under their respective land rights regimes.

The Commonwealth plays a key role in ensuring the native title system operates effectively to facilitate claims resolution and agreement making, and is responsible for the ALRA.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The Commonwealth plays a facilitation role in bringing together stakeholders in the native title sector to develop and implement native title policy, including by working closely with (and providing funding for) the sector's peak body, the National Native Title Council (NNTC). The Commonwealth is working with the NNTC and native title corporations Prescribed Bodies Corporate (PBCs) to consider options to improve PBC capacity and support native title holders to better manage their lands and waters, and enjoy their native title rights and interests. The Commonwealth will work with PBCs and the NNTC to develop shared reform priorities.

Under the ALRA, the Commonwealth is working with the Northern Territory Land Councils and Aboriginals Benefit Account (ABA) Advisory Committee to ensure Aboriginal people in the Northern Territory have a say in how ABA grant funding is spent. The Commonwealth is also working with the Northern Territory Land Councils and the ABA Advisory Committee to provide ABA funding to Northern Territory community organisations.

A co-design process with the Wreck Bay Aboriginal Community Council (WBACC) is underway to consider amending the Commonwealth Aboriginal Land Grant (Jervis Bay Territory) Act 1986 (Land Grant Act) to encourage local decision-making and enable best practice governance arrangements for the benefit of members. Separately, the Land Grant Act allows for further grants of Jervis Bay Territory land to WBACC and a process is underway to consider available parcels of land.

The Commonwealth funds a national network of 15 Native Title Representative Bodies and Service Providers (NTRBs-SPs) and the four Northern Territory Land Councils. These bodies provide assistance and representation to native title claimants, native title holders and traditional owners in the Northern Territory. The Commonwealth works closely with these bodies in the development of native title and Northern Territory land rights policy.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

The Commonwealth funds the NNTC to work with PBCs and native title holders to improve their capacity and decision-making through regional forums and training. In addition, grant funding is available to PBCs (approximately $6.5 million per year) to build organisational capacity to support the effective management of their native title rights and interests, build long term sustainability, and support effective agreement-making.

In early 2021, the Commonwealth passed the Native Title Legislation Amendment Act 2021 (NTLAA) and amended the Native Title (Prescribed Bodies Corporate) Regulations 1999 to increase the transparency and accountability of PBCs to native title holders and streamline PBC decision-making. To support greater PBC dispute resolution, the Commonwealth will work with the NNTC and NTRBs-SPs to co-design a mechanism to assist with PBC membership disputes. The Commonwealth is also considering options to increase PBC transparency and accountability to native title holders in relation to native title benefits.

Together, these initiatives align with Priority Reform Two and will support the community-controlled PBC sector to continue to strengthen governance structures and transparency for native title holders, and to leverage community development, business and employment opportunities arising from their native title rights and interests.

Native title agreements can materially contribute to Closing the Gap. The Commonwealth has put in place Indigenous Land Use Agreement (ILUA) Policy Principles, a whole-of-government approach to the way in which ILUA negotiations are conducted. These principles align with Priority Reform Three, ensuring a consistent, best practice approach is taken by all Commonwealth departments in ILUA negotiations.

The National Native Title Tribunal's (NNTT) Native Title Registrar keeps three native title registers: the Register of Native Title Claims; the National Native Title Register; and the Register of Indigenous Land Use Agreements. The NNTT also maintains databases on native title applications, registration decisions and determinations, and future act applications and determinations. These registers are publicly available and provide access to native title data (including at a regional level). The Commonwealth is also funding the Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies (AIATSIS) to maintain an information hub for PBCs and people interested in native title. This information and data assists PBCs to understand their rights, obligations and functions which aligns with Priority Reform Four.

The Commonwealth has also worked with the Northern Territory Land Councils and Aboriginals Benefit Account (ABA) Advisory Committee since 2018 to co-design a package of generational reforms to the Aboriginal Land Rights (Northern Territory) Act 1976. This extensive co-design process has provided the opportunity to modernise the ALRA with the ongoing agreement and support of key stakeholders. The reforms will establish a new Aboriginal-controlled body to administer investments and beneficial payments from the ABA, clarify community entity township leasing arrangements and streamline mining and exploration license approvals whilst maintaining strong protections for traditional owners in the Northern Territory.

Actions

Funding for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander land holding bodies and representatives

The Commonwealth provides annual funding for NTRBs-SPs (approximately $100 million per year), and for the Federal Court of Australia (the administrative entity), which includes the Court's native title practice area and the NNTT (a total allocation of approximately $294 million per year).

The Commonwealth allocates $86.2 million per year from the ABA to the four Northern Territory Land Councils for the performance of statutory functions, including providing support for the finalisation of the remaining 40 outstanding Northern Territory ALRA land claims. The Commonwealth also provides funding and support for the operations of the Aboriginal Land Commissioner who conducts formal land claim inquiries under the ALRA to facilitate the finalisation of claims and associated grants of Aboriginal land ($579,000 in 2020-21). In November 2019, the Minister for Indigenous Australians agreed to fast track finalisation of 15 land claims which were the subject of a report prepared by the Aboriginal Land Commissioner.

The Commonwealth is investing an additional $36.7 million in PBCs over the next four years to further strengthen PBCs to improve their capacity and realise the benefits of native title for native title holders. This additional support includes:

- $21 million for the PBC Capacity Building measure to expand the program of PBC support
- $8.6 million to expand PBC Basic Support provided through NTRB-SPs, and
- $7.1 million to assist PBCs to implement the reforms in the NTLAA which affect PBCs.

Maintaining effective legislative frameworks

The Commonwealth maintains the effectiveness of the NTA and ALRA through monitoring and adjusting legislative frameworks as needed. Under the NTLAA the Commonwealth added a new provision to the NTA (section 47C) to enable native title and government parties to agree to disregard the historical extinguishment of native title over an area that has been set aside or vested to preserve the natural environment, such as areas of national, state and territory parks. This allows for more areas of land to be claimed under the NTA and support the realisation of this Outcome.

Next steps

The Commonwealth will continue to ensure arrangements under the NTA and ALRA support resolution of native title claims and land claims in the Northern Territory. In addition to the actions outlined above, the Commonwealth has committed to:

- considering longer term-funding agreements and recognition for NTRBs-SPs under the NTA to support planning and investment in claims resolution – this will be done through a new working group with NTRBs-SPs established to ensure funding and service delivery arrangements best meet the interests and needs of native title holders and claimants, and
- continuing to work with the Land Councils and the Northern Territory Government to support the finalisation of 40 outstanding Northern Territory land claims.

Significant action by the states and territories is also required to meet these Targets. The Commonwealth will continue to bring together all jurisdictions through forums to support the realisation of this Outcome, and work with the jurisdictions to consider and develop native title policy and reforms. However, the states and territories need to streamline legal and associated administrative and policy arrangements for resolving land claims under state and territory systems and continue to resolve native title claims by consent where possible and consider policy arrangements to facilitate resolution of claims.

Outcome 16: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultures and languages are strong, supported and flourishing

Target 16: By 2031, there is a sustained increase in number and strength of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages being spoken.

For the first time, the National Agreement includes a target that acknowledges the critical role that language and culture play in the ongoing health and wellbeing of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. The inclusion of this Target represents a structural change in the role of language and culture in broader policy development and implementation.

Language is fundamental to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander culture and identity, even for those who do not speak language. Strengthening language is central to achieving outcomes across all Closing the Gap outcomes. All Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages, traditional and new, provide significant social and economic benefits to their speakers. Speaking language has demonstrated benefits for individual health and wellbeing, is beneficial in learning contexts, and is an asset in terms of employment prospects and income-generating opportunities across a wide range of sectors. In this document, references to ‘speaking’ language include communication systems, such as sign languages, that use gestures rather than speech.

The overwhelming majority of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people – around 90% – report that they do not speak their traditional language. The Commonwealth recognises the importance of supporting language acquisition for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people seeking to learn language, and recognises that appropriate consideration of language across Commonwealth policies, programs, and services is a critical element of supporting language acquisition.

In partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, the Commonwealth is committed to strengthening Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages. This includes through the Commonwealth’s support for the capture, preservation, maintenance, use, and consideration of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages, to prevent further language loss, enable equitable access to government services and opportunities, and to enable Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to experience the many health, wellbeing, and employment benefits of speaking language.

The Commonwealth welcomes the United Nations Declaration of the International Decade of Indigenous Languages (2022-32), and looks forward to working with international and domestic partners on activities that ensure Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages thrive, are celebrated, and are considered across government services and policies. Australia will represent the Asia and Pacific region on the first rotation of the Global Taskforce organising the International Decade.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The Commonwealth provides Australia’s peak Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages organisation First Languages Australia (FLA) annual operational funding and strategic project funding through the Indigenous Languages and Arts (ILA) program. The role of FLA as the peak organisation representing Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander language groups is to communicate, advocate and educate about Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages to all Australians. FLA is advised by a committee of nine Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and includes representatives from most states and territories, and the Torres Strait.

The Commonwealth's partnership with FLA, and other subject matter experts, ensures that the policy framework is culturally appropriate and that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander voices are reflected in the Implementation Plan and actions to meet Target 16.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

The Commonwealth delivers programs that support data collection around Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages – including the National Indigenous Languages Survey series. This is done within the framework and principles of the Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies (AIATSIS) Code of Ethics. The Code includes standards of practice for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander knowledge and data sovereignty, and will ensure that any future iterations of the National Indigenous Languages Survey are managed consistent with the objectives of Priority Reform Four.

Actions

Indigenous Languages and Arts (ILA) program

The ILA program invests around $20 million per annum to support, express, preserve and maintain culture through Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages and arts activities throughout Australia. ILA funding targets the capture and revitalisation of traditional languages. The program provides annual multi-year operational funding to 20 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander language centres around Australia. Additionally, there is an annual open competitive grant opportunity seeking applications for community-led Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages and arts projects. Projects funded through the ILA program must demonstrate how they will make a valuable contribution to the outcomes associated with Target 16.

To support the critical role of the ILA program in achieving Target 16, the Commonwealth is investing an additional:

- $12.1 million to support the existing ILA-funded Indigenous language centres to expand their capacity to do more of the critical work that will achieve Outcome 16
- $5.6 million to establish new Commonwealth-funded Indigenous language centres
- $0.8 million to ensure endangered languages can continue to be recorded and preserved for future generations by protecting the most at-risk Indigenous languages, and
- $4.3 million for the development of place-based partnerships between language centres and local service delivery partners in health and early childhood to support Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to learn and use language(s) across their lifetimes, the Commonwealth.

Through the ILA program, the Commonwealth uses technology in an innovative and culturally sensitive manner to capture and store Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages, and to support teaching and learning of traditional languages, including by younger people.

National Indigenous Languages Report

The National Indigenous Languages Report analyses Australia's most comprehensive sources of data on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages. The National Indigenous Languages Report:

- strengthens the evidence base on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages, which is critical to designing and delivering programs, policies and services that work
- provides guidance on practical ways to use its findings to inform policy, program development and service delivery for Australia's First People.
- identifies areas of future focus including engaging early to design fit-for-purpose services and programs and embed Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander language recognition in policy and evaluation processes, and
- builds on and updates the work from the previous two National Indigenous Languages Surveys undertaken by AIATSIS.

The National Indigenous Languages Surveys provide robust data on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages and are critical to informing Commonwealth support for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Research methodology for the Surveys is subject to approval by the AIATSIS Research Ethics Committee.

Indigenous Language Dictionaries project

The Commonwealth supports the preservation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages through the Indigenous Language Dictionaries project. This project works with participating communities to record and translate language in a tangible printed publication. The Commonwealth has committed $200,000 per year until 30 June 2023 from the IAS to support the Indigenous Language Dictionaries project.

Indigenous interpreting services

The Commonwealth will continue to support Indigenous language interpreting services, to ensure Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have equal access to government services and opportunities, and to provide employment opportunities for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who speak an Indigenous language.

Since 2018, the Commonwealth has committed $8.6 million, to 30 June 2023, from the IAS to support interpreting services for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Target regions include the Northern Territory, the Kimberley region in Western Australia, and the Ngaanyatjarra Anangu Pitjantjatjara Yankunytjatjara (APY) Lands in Western Australia, South Australia and the Northern Territory.

Additionally, the Commonwealth invests more than $3.7 million annually via the Northern Territory Remote Aboriginal Investment National Partnership Agreement, to support the Northern Territory Government’s Aboriginal Interpreting Service (AIS). The AIS provides interpreting services across the Northern Territory.

Next steps

While these actions are important steps forward to drive progress against Target 16, all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages are currently under threat. The Commonwealth recognises that the greatest gains against Outcome 16 will come from continued investment in the ILA program.

To ensure strong governance, the Joint Council on Closing the Gap will establish a joined-up approach to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages by 2022. This will identify opportunities to work more effectively across government jurisdictions, to reduce gaps and duplication, and drive progress against Outcome 16.

The Commonwealth will also continue to work with states and territories and local governments, to ensure that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages are considered across the full breadth of all governments’ policies, programs and service delivery.

Outcome 17: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have access to information and services enabling participation in informed decision-making regarding their own lives

Target 17: By 2026, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have equal levels of digital inclusion.

Digital technologies are changing the way Australians live, work and do business. All Australians need access to these technologies to fully participate in social and economic life. There is, however, a digital divide for some Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people across the three elements of inclusion: access, affordability and digital ability.

Addressing this digital divide will help ensure Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people can enjoy the benefits offered by digital technologies, including taking advantage of the employment and business opportunities associated with the digital economy.

Partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people

The Commonwealth will work in partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and organisations in progressing actions under Target 17. As part of this, the Commonwealth will develop an Indigenous Digital Inclusion Plan (IDIP) which will help support improved digital inclusion for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in the three areas of access, affordability and digital ability. The Commonwealth is working with relevant members of the Coalition of Peaks, including First Nations Media Australia and other Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations and businesses to develop the IDIP, which will be based on community priorities.

The Commonwealth is working to identify gaps in current efforts, including around data collection. Efforts under this Outcome will also aim to ensure actions are tailored to each community and their needs, and will help build the capacity of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people throughout the policy development and delivery process.

Embedding the Priority Reforms

The Commonwealth will continue to develop a deeper understanding of the needs and experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people when accessing and using government services. This understanding will enable the Commonwealth to design and deliver services that are user-centred and inclusive, and provide equitable access to all users, regardless of ability or environment.

Establishing partnerships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities and people will provide the Commonwealth with a platform for learning and understanding. Taking a user-centred approach will also enable the Commonwealth to challenge unconscious bias in decision-making by using qualitative and quantitative data that has been gathered through engagement with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Actions

The Commonwealth is delivering a range of measures to support different elements of digital inclusion for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Future actions will promote community-led responses to build on outcomes which are designed and delivered in partnership with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, and will be targeted to addressing any gaps in existing measures.

The Commonwealth is also exploring issues related to measurement of this Target, and making sure that data sources are available to assist with monitoring progress between now and 2026. More generally, it is also working with states and territories through the Data and Digital Ministers Meeting (DDMM) to identify initiatives that will help address the digital divide and support equitable access to the benefits of digital transformation for all Australians. The DDMM has noted this is particularly important for regional and remote communities.

Infrastructure investment

Under the IAS, the Commonwealth manages a network of up to 245 community payphones and 301 Wi-Fi satellite phones in remote Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities and funds Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander media activities nationally, primarily through Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander broadcasting.

Access to telecommunications services for all Australians is underpinned by the Commonwealth's Universal Service Guarantee and Universal Service Obligation, providing legislated frameworks for access to broadband as well as voice telephone services and payphones. This provides all Australians, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with access to fixed broadband voice services.

The rollout of the National Broadband Network (NBN) is providing access to fixed broadband with speeds of at least 25 Megabits per second (Mbps) to all premises, with 90% of fixed-line services able to access speeds of over 50 Mbps. The NBN Company (NBN Co) is consulting with retail service providers to develop products that will improve take-up for households on low incomes, renters and older Australians.

Upgrades to the NBN were announced in September 2020. By 2023 an estimated 75% of premises in the fixed-line footprint will have access to speeds of up to 1 Gigabit per second. As part of the upgrades, NBN Co has also created a $300 million fund, which it will use to co-invest with Commonwealth, state and territory governments and local government to deliver access to higher speed wholesale broadband services over the NBN to households and businesses in regional and remote areas of Australia. The $300 million co-investment fund is expected to assist in moving more regional areas from fixed wireless or satellite to a fixed line access technology.

The Commonwealth is also continuing to invest in improving access to telecommunications infrastructure in regional and remote Australia through the $380 million Mobile Black Spot Program with co-investment from state and territory governments. As part of the Program, $80 million in funding has also been allocated for Round 6, the process for which is expected to begin after the Round 5A competitive assessment process is complete.

The Commonwealth is also investing in targeted, place-based connectivity solutions through the Regional Connectivity Program (RCP). Under Round 1 of the RCP, the Government invested $90.3 million in telecommunications infrastructure projects to address local digital priorities in 81 regional areas. As part of the 2021-22 Budget, the Commonwealth announced that it would commit a further $84.8 million to the RCP.

As part of the additional RCP funding, a further $24.6 million has been allocated towards an additional 51 meritorious Round 1 proposals, which were unable to be supported from the initial funding envelope.

In addition, $68.5 million in dedicated funding has been allocated to improve telecommunications infrastructure in North Australia.

The next Regional Telecommunications Review has begun with the formal appointment on 1 June 2021 of the Regional Telecommunications Independent Review Committee (RTIRC). The RTIRC will undertake a thorough examination of regional telecommunication issues, in line with its terms of reference. In addition to examining the adequacy of regional telecommunications as required under the statute, the terms of reference flag a number of particular matters of interest to the Commonwealth, including the impact of its policies and programs, COVID-19, new technologies, service reliability and regional development.

In developing and finalising its report, the RTIRC needs to consult publicly and is expected to hold meetings with communities and stakeholders, including with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Accessible service delivery

The Commonwealth will also continue to apply the Digital Service Standard to the design and delivery of public facing services, which will provide all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people access to services that are inclusive and create equitable access, regardless of their ability and environment.

Digital literacy

NBN Co is undertaking activities to support connectivity and digital capability which may benefit Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities. This includes the Digital Capability Tool to assist individuals to assess their digital ability and identify opportunities for improvement a digital literacy program to encourage safe and productive online participation, and the Innovate with NBN grants program which promotes and encourages Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander business participation and innovation online.

Next steps

The IDIP is being developed by the NIAA, with support from the Department of Infrastructure, Transport, Regional Development and Communications. This work is part of the Commonwealth’s response to the recommendations of the 2018 Regional Telecommunications Review. As mentioned earlier, the IDIP will focus on access, affordability and digital ability. Consultations with stakeholders began in June 2021 with the plan to be completed in 2021.

Cross-cutting outcome areas

The Commonwealth recognises that the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander population is incredibly diverse. Different cohorts of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people have different needs and their unique experiences must be considered when designing policy and programs to achieve outcomes for all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Achieving outcomes for these cohorts will help achieve the targets and outcomes under the National Agreement. That is why the National Agreement includes the commitment that, where available and appropriate, data against targets and outcomes will be disaggregated by disability, gender and age to understand whether actions being taken are addressing the needs of these groups. The following sections highlight what the Commonwealth is doing in addition to the Outcomes and targets actions to cater for these particular cohorts of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander population.

Disability

For many Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, western notions of ‘disability’ and exclusion on the basis of capabilities are not concepts that readily translate to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages or cultures. Evidence demonstrates high inclusion in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community life for many Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with diverse capabilities. This demonstrates a key difference in perspectives about disability, which needs to be incorporated into the design and implementation of access, inclusion and disability policies and programs across all targets.

On every other socio-economic indicator, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with a disability experience acute social, wellbeing and health inequalities. The prevalence of disability among Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people is twice the rate experienced by other Australians. It is complex and intersects with social and structural determinants of health and wellbeing, including education, justice, housing, employment and access to appropriate infrastructure. Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with disability also experience multiple layers of individual and structural discrimination (ableism and racism) based on both their disability and Indigeneity, contributing to trauma, isolation and exclusion.

Actions

Ensuring that investments under each of the socio-economic targets are inclusive, accessible and equitable for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people with disability, will help meet Closing the Gap targets. For example, the National Framework for Protecting Australia’s Children 2009-2020, described in Target 12, will have a focus on children and young people with disability, and parents and carers with disability in its design and implementation. This approach reflects Australia’s Disability Strategy 2021-2031, a key mechanism for the Commonwealth, states and territories to realise disability as a cross-cutting outcome for Closing the Gap. Under Australia’s Disability Strategy all agencies are responsible for contributing to the improvement of outcomes for people with disability.

The Commonwealth through the Social Services portfolio is supporting an increase to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander individual community disability advocates, increasing the number of ACCHOs registered to deliver National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS) services, and designing a new National Early Childhood Program to provide information, linkages and community-based supports for young children (birth to school age) with emerging developmental concerns or disability outside the NDIS. Improving the hearing health of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and adults through additional and tailored hearing services will also be a priority for the Social Services portfolio and the Department of Health.

The National Disability Insurance Agency are implementing the NDIS Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Engagement Strategy and Thin Market Projects to increase the number of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people on NDIS packages.

The Commonwealth, is working with the community-controlled sector and states and territories to develop a disability Sector Strengthening Plan. This plan is due to be complete by April 2022.

Gender and sexuality

There are distinctive needs for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women, girls and LGBTQIA+SB (Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer, Intersex, Asexual, Sistergirl and Brotherboy) communities that should be considered in developing responses to achieve better outcomes, particularly in the areas of safety and justice, health and wellbeing, education, economic security, land, housing, employment, training and business.

Gender and sexuality are inherently linked. There is a significant opportunity to leverage the unique strengths, needs and aspirations of these cohorts to achieve the desired outcomes of many government policies and programs. In designing policy initiatives and support approaches to address these, greater understanding is needed of the impacts that colonisation has had on the construction of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's gender identities and sexuality.

When gender and sexuality as intersectional considerations are meaningfully incorporated into policy and program design, it ensures that the diverse experiences and identities of all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people are included, supported and empowered. This enables greater access to appropriate services and improved outcomes for those accessing them, as well as elevating the voices of women and LGBTQIA+SB peoples in advocacy and decision-making.

Actions

As mentioned in Target 13, the Women's Voices report led by the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Social Justice Commissioner elevates the diverse and lived experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women, girls and their communities. The Women's Voices Report was tabled in the Australian Parliament on 9 December 2020 and will be used to inform future policy direction. The Commonwealth will provide a response to the recommendations of the Women's Voices report.

Stage 2 of the Wiyi Yani U Thangani Project is funded under the Fourth Action Plan of the National Plan to Reduce Violence against Women and their Children 2010-2022. Stage 2 will see the development of tools and resources to empower Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and girls to advocate for themselves and actively participate in the change they want for their futures.

The Commonwealth, through the NIAA, will support the Office of the Registrar of Indigenous Corporations (ORIC) to explore options to improve gender representation on the boards of Indigenous corporations registered under the Corporations (Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander) Act 2006 (CATSI Act). This will include supporting registered organisations to understand how they can embed gender representation in their governance arrangements if culturally appropriate and desired. Options for ORIC include providing gender-sensitive information to interested CATSI Act organisations, and collecting gender disaggregated data about CATSI Act organisation board composition, where possible. This work will be undertaken within existing resources.

The Commonwealth will explore options for the possible development of a mandatory APS-wide culturally sensitive gender and sexuality training program to inform decision-makers and policy and program design. This action will improve the capability of the APS to identify and eliminate racism, sexism, homophobia and transphobia across government, and challenge unconscious biases that result in decisions based on stereotypes. This work will be undertaken within existing resources.

Aged care

In response to the findings of the Aged Care Royal Commission, the Commonwealth announced in the 2021-22 Budget a significant investment of $572.5 million to make the aged care system more accessible for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, including:

- $106 million to fund a workforce of 250 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to provide trusted face-to-face support and assist Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people better navigate and access care. This workforce will also sit alongside Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people while Regional Assessment Service (RAS) and Aged Care Assessment Teams (ACATs) assess their care needs upon entry and while in care

- $396.9 million to fund aged services to upgrade existing buildings and construct purpose built care services, including to connect residential facilities with communities on country and provide essential staff housing. This funding will also support Aboriginal Community-Controlled Health Services to expand into aged care
- $61.6 million additional service delivery funding for the 43 National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Flexible Care Services (NATSIFCS), and
- $8 million to assist Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations with governance, business, training and leadership.

These investments will not only ensure culturally safe aged care services are available and accessible for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, they will result in a more skilled, supported workforce and boost local economic activity. This will help increase the capability and viability of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations to deliver care and improve cultural safety across the aged care system.

To further improve cultural safety across the aged care system, the Indigenous Employment Initiative program is also providing funds for aged care providers to subsidise the training and employment costs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people providing non-clinical aged care services to older Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Further actions

The Commonwealth is taking forward a number of other actions that further support Closing the Gap that are not directly aligned to particular outcomes or Priority Reforms. The Commonwealth is also delivering on other commitments set out in the National Agreement that need to be actioned in implementation plans to contribute more broadly to Closing the Gap.

Local, regional and remote

Taking a place-based approach, the Commonwealth works with local, regional and remote Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities to develop policies and programs and broker solutions that respond to community needs and aspirations. The Commonwealth is leveraging communities' assets and strengths including the human, social, cultural, political and economic capital. This place-based approach is critical to achieving better outcomes for regional Australia, and the significant proportion of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander population who live in regional areas.

Actions

The Commonwealth is delivering the next phase of investment to support the continued implementation of the 20 year Our North, Our Future: White Paper for Developing Northern Australia. The recently announced Our North, Our Future: 2021-2026 – Next Five Year Plan aims to strengthen and improve economic outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people across Northern Australia.

Through its Regional Deals, the Commonwealth has put in place arrangements that are tailored to a region's comparative advantages, assets and challenges, reflecting the unique needs of each region. The Barkly Regional Deal is the first regional deal in Australia and features a community governance framework that brings together Traditional Owners, Aboriginal organisations, business leaders, youth, the non-government sector, and the three levels of government. The Hinkler Regional Deal was signed in January 2020 and a Regional Deal for Albury Wodonga is under development – both deals prioritise engagement with local Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities.

Additionally, the Commonwealth supports local decision-making through models including Empowered Communities. The Commonwealth's investment supports Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander leaders to work with their communities and partners to identify and progress local priorities. In Empowered Communities regions, partnerships with governments and joint decision-making processes are continuing to evolve, with local communities guiding funding decisions and strategies to address critical issues that affect their lives (see Priority Reform One).

Local place-based approaches are also an effective way to drive better outcomes for families and communities. Stronger Places, Stronger People is a community-led place-based initiative being implemented by the Commonwealth in partnership with state and territory governments and 10 communities across Australia. It involves collaboration between the whole community, all levels of government, service providers, business, philanthropic organisations and others to develop and deliver local plans of action to support communities to achieve their aspirations. Some Stronger Places, Stronger People communities, for example in Bourke NSW and the Far West Coast Region of South Australia, are positioning their community-led initiatives to address Closing the Gap outcomes.

The Commonwealth is also driving better outcomes in close collaboration with states and territories, such as through the Northern Territory Families and Children Tripartite Forum to improve services and outcomes for Northern Territory families. The forum's purpose is to address an identified need for structured and sustained high-level engagement between the Northern Territory Government, Commonwealth Government and the community sector regarding children experiencing vulnerability, young people and families, and child protection and youth justice issues.

The Commonwealth is working with and supporting a range of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-led regional approaches.

- The Murdi Paaki Regional Assembly in NSW receives support from the NSW Government and the Commonwealth. The Commonwealth engages with Murdi Paaki Regional Assembly on service delivery as a key stakeholder in the region. Through the NIAA, the Commonwealth collaborated with Murdi Paaki Regional Assembly to show-case the Assembly’s community-led governance model
- The Yarrabah Leaders Forum in Queensland receives funding from the Commonwealth to support its role as the leadership and local decision-making group for the community
- Kanyirninpa Jukurrpa (KJ) in Western Australia is supported by the Commonwealth and Western Australian governments. KJ operates on a model of comprehensive community input to program design and delivery to build strong, sustainable communities across the Martu Lands. The Commonwealth provides funding to help support KJ to deliver its cultural, country and social programs
- The Torres Strait Treaty relies on strong governance arrangements which are supported by the Commonwealth. These governance arrangements include the annual Traditional Inhabitants Meeting held between Australian and Papua New Guinean traditional inhabitants to facilitate local level discussions and solutions to inform policy deliberations.

Further, the NIAA will over the next 12 months develop and pilot Regional Investment Strategies, as part of its Policy and Investment Framework to support a place-based approach to decision-making about expenditure of the IAS. The aim is to ensure investment decisions are developed in partnership with communities, shaped to meet the local context and community-identified needs. The Regional Investment Strategies model will be evaluated with a view to improvement and broader rollout across the Commonwealth if appropriate.

Better regional data is important to efforts to close the gap for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people living in regional and remote Australia. See the Priority Reform Four chapter for further detail.

Commitments in the National Agreement

Data Development Plan

The Commonwealth is working with all parties to develop a Data Development Plan (DDP). The DDP will address data gaps in the National Agreement and ensure Closing the Gap enables high quality reporting on progress that also reflects the difference of experience across the country and among Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

The DDP will outline clear timeframes for data development actions to be delivered and who will be responsible for each action. This will be reviewed by the Joint Council on Closing the Gap when it reviews the Productivity Commission and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander-led reviews, at which time Joint Council may consider changes to the plan.

To progress work on the DDP, the NIAA established a Data and Reporting Working Group with membership from the Coalition of Peaks, states and territories and key data custodians including the ABS and the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare. This Working Group provides advice and technical support on data and reporting issues relevant to the National Agreement. The Working Group will develop the DDP for endorsement by the Joint Council in 2022.

Joint Communications Strategy

Building awareness and ownership of the National Agreement is an important aspect of driving the change required to achieve outcomes under Closing the Gap. The Commonwealth currently hosts the Closing the Gap website (www.ClosingtheGap.gov.au) that provides easy-to-access and practical information about the National Agreement, its commitments and how it is being implemented. The website provides resources to build awareness of Closing the Gap including posters, Frequently Asked Questions (FAQs) and links to the Coalition of Peaks and each government’s respective websites. It also includes an Implementation Tracker to enable all Australians to follow progress on implementing the commitments in the National Agreement.

The National Agreement committed all parties to develop a Joint Communications Strategy. The Commonwealth and the Coalition of Peaks co-led the development of the Strategy with the support of jurisdictions. The Joint Communication Strategy was agreed by the Joint Council in April 2021 and is available on the Closing the Gap website.

The key objectives of the Joint Communications Strategy are to:

- build ownership, trust, credibility and accountability of the National Agreement among Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and assist them to engage with governments to apply the commitments in the National Agreement
- provide a central role for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander media
- ensure communications about the National Agreement are clear, accessible, timely, relevant and work to preserve the many Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages
- ensure communications products are developed and implemented in partnership, including through community generated content, and
- build awareness and support among all Australians, including to ensure strong systemic engagement with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people.

Examples of actions the Commonwealth is implementing to deliver on these objectives include:

- convening a Communications Working Group, with Coalition of Peaks and representatives of states and territories (WA and ACT) to progress the development of a new Closing the Gap logo to symbolise the partnership approach under Closing the Gap
- co-designing an Implementation Tracker to enable Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and the community generally to identify where progress is up to in each jurisdiction on each initiative committed to under the National Agreement
- developing an eLearning module for Commonwealth public servants to ensure they are embedding the values articulated in the National Agreement into their practice, and
- developing communications products to enable more consistent, considered approaches to establishing and strengthening partnerships and shared decision-making with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people across all Commonwealth portfolios.

The Commonwealth will continue to develop new communications actions in line with the Joint Communications Strategy over the course of the National Agreement.

How this Implementation Plan will work in practice

The National Agreement recognises that a new way of working is required to improve life outcomes of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and that this must include partnerships with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and organisations. This Implementation Plan provides the foundation for this change by identifying how the Commonwealth is adjusting its policy settings to design, deliver and report on its policies and programs to meet the commitments under the National Agreement.

Like the National Agreement on Closing the Gap, this Implementation Plan is a living document. It provides a snapshot of what action is being taken, where reform is required, and what partnerships will support this progress. It is a transparent document that will be reviewed, updated and made public. This will ensure that the Commonwealth is accountable for its actions and commitments under this Implementation Plan and the National Agreement.

Annual reporting

The Commonwealth's first annual report will be delivered in mid-2022. As the National Agreement sets out, each annual report will provide information on the delivery of this Implementation Plan and commitments under the National Agreement. The Commonwealth's annual report, including changes to this Implementation Plan, will be provided to Joint Council, tabled in the Commonwealth Parliament and made public each year. The Commonwealth will work with its Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander partners on annual reports and updates to the Implementation Plan.

The Commonwealth's annual report will look back over the previous year reflecting on actions taken and the results of Productivity Commission data reporting and reviews. It will also report on reviews led by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and other relevant evidence of progress. The annual report will also look forward and set out priority areas for action to continue to make progress toward targets.

As required by the National Agreement, each annual report will list the number of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community-controlled organisations and other Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander organisations that have been allocated funding, listing the names of the organisations and the amount allocated.

Through this annual cycle the Commonwealth will review and assess progress based on available data and evidence to ensure that the Commonwealth's actions and effort is targeted on the things that will make a difference. This process will inform reprioritisation of policy and program effort and support consideration of new investment.

The NIAA's Policy and Investment Framework (PIF) will provide the overarching architecture to guide the NIAA's decision-making on what the NIAA invests in and why, including the strategic and evidence-based context to inform this. The PIF will help inform the annual review of this Implementation Plan by providing a clear line of sight between the National Agreement and policy and investment decisions made by the NIAA and how these align with those made by other Commonwealth agencies. The annual reporting process will feed into the NIAA's PIF to support decision-making on future investments.

Accountability

The Joint Council has developed an Implementation Tracker which is available on the Closing the Gap website. The Implementation Tracker enables Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, the Joint Council and the community generally, to identify progress on each initiative committed to under the National Agreement.

The Commonwealth’s commitment to achieve results and make improvements against targets is a responsibility shared by all ministers, and all ministers will be held accountable by the government for actions to achieve outcomes and Priority Reforms in their portfolios. The Minister for Indigenous Australians will maintain a key role in coordinating this whole-of-government approach and for driving transformational change across the Commonwealth.

Communicating about this Implementation Plan

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities’ awareness of the Commonwealth’s Implementation Plan is important to enable active and critical engagement with its commitments and actions. The Commonwealth hosts the Closing the Gap website (www.ClosingtheGap.gov.au) which is where the public can access the Implementation Plan. The website will host a page linking to all jurisdictional implementation plans.

The Commonwealth has been, and is, strengthening its internal communications mechanisms on Closing the Gap. For instance, the NIAA is exploring the potential to develop an eLearning module for APS staff to communicate information about the National Agreement and emphasise the role of APS staff in delivering the Implementation Plan. Commonwealth agencies have Closing the Gap coordination functions and/or teams that provide information about, and updates to, implementation planning. The NIAA will continue to convene interdepartmental committees to support communication and joined up effort across the Commonwealth.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander led review – Independent Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander led reviews will be carried out within twelve months of each three yearly independent review by the Productivity Commission. They are an opportunity to capture Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and communities experience of Closing the Gap implementation.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people – The Commonwealth Government acknowledges that there is no single Australian Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander culture or group and that there are many diverse communities, language groups and kinships throughout Australia. For the purposes of this Implementation Plan, the term Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people is respectfully used.

Commonwealth – The legal entity of the Commonwealth of Australia, created by the Australian Constitution. The term may also be used to differentiate the Australian Government from state and territory governments.

Cultural safety – Cultural safety refers to overcoming the power imbalances of places, people and policies that occur between the majority non-Indigenous position and the minority Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander person so that there is no assault, challenge or denial of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander person's identity, of who they are and what they need. Cultural safety is met through actions from the majority position that recognise, respect, and nurture the unique cultural identity of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. Only the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander person who is a recipient of a service or interaction can determine whether it is culturally safe.

Indigenous Advancement Strategy (IAS) – The IAS is the way the Commonwealth Government funds and delivers a range of programs for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. At its inception in 2014, the IAS was a significant reform in the administration and delivery of services and programs for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, consolidating a number of programs, grants and activities.

National Agreement – The National Agreement on Closing the Gap was signed by all Australian governments and the Coalition of Peaks in July 2020. It sets out commitments for all Australian governments to work together with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to overcome the inequality experienced by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, and achieve life outcomes equal to all Australians.

Partnership Agreement – The Partnership Agreement on Closing the Gap 2019-2029, signed by COAG and the Coalition of Peaks, setting out shared decision-making arrangements on the next phase of Closing the Gap.

Productivity Commission – Commonwealth Government’s independent research and advisory body on a range of economic, social and environmental issues affecting the welfare of Australians. It will develop and maintain a publicly accessible dashboard comprising data and associated supporting materials to inform the reporting on progress on Closing the Gap. The dashboard will be updated on a regular basis (at a minimum, annually) and will be maintained for the full term of the National Agreement. It will also undertake a comprehensive review of progress every three years.

Significant and sustained – A year-on-year improvement relative to the baseline data that is equal to or greater than the historic rate of change.
