Submission to the Productivity Commission Draft Report (April 2016) – Intellectual Property Arrangements

I am writing to strongly object to the recommendations made in your draft report on Intellectual Property Arrangements, which was released on 29 April 2016.

I am a 31 year old unpublished Australian writer. I have a full time job and write on my commute to work and at night after my daughter is in bed. Every moment I can, I am writing.

I might not have the talent to be the next Patterson or Marchetta, but I have the right to the work I have created. To the work I stay up until 2am writing in a foggy haze because I have to get up at 5am to go to work. I have a right to the work I pull my hair out over, I have a right to that comma I debated about adding or deleting for 3 hours.

I as a writer should have rights over MY work until I die. My children should be able to collect royalties on my work after I die. This is fair and reasonable. What is not fair is telling me that my hard work is worth nothing to me after 15-25 years. That this investment of my time, energy and emotion is only as good until I am 50 years old. What is the point in creating anything?

My major concerns are as follows:

1. Term of Copyright

While I understand that it is not possible for Australia to reduce the term of copyright to 15-25 years as proposed in your report, due to a range of free trade agreements, the recommendation was nonetheless very disturbing to me as an author. I have the right to retain ownership of my work in the same way that any individual may maintain ownership of any other business that they have built and it is very concerning that your report is apparently underpinned by the belief that this should not be the case.

2. Parallel Importation Rules

Your draft report proposes a change to Australia's parallel importation rules for books. I believe, however, that the current system has sufficient safety nets in place to protect the interests of the consumer, while still allowing myself and my fellow authors to retain control of their rights and income and enjoy a level playing field with our fellow authors in the UK and USA.

3. Fair Use

Territorial copyright helps publishers manage risk and support the creation of new Australian stories. Without these rules, as an author, I would lose income and the support of a vibrant local publishing industry.

Australian law currently sets out a series of clear exceptions to copyright restrictions under "fair dealing". This is a fair arrangement that works well for all parties, including authors. If this were to change to the American-style system of fair use, however, I would not only lose valuable income, but would also have to pay the litigation costs if I discovered free copying that I considered to be unfair usage. This would be beyond my means and beyond the means of most authors.

I, along with thousands of Australian authors, am deeply concerned that these changes will affect my ability to continue to write, earn a living and find a publisher. I respectfully ask that you reconsider your position.

Kind regards,

Lisa Lancaster
