

Brief submission

As a taxpayer and voter I do not give permission to any political party to privatise any more of our public services. Privatisation only benefits shareholders, and does nothing for ordinary Australians. Politicians are caretakers, not owners, and have no right selling off public services, infrastructure, and utilities because once they leave public hands, they can never be returned. Just look at electricity prices, and you can see how privatisation failed miserably. Ditto with the sale of the Commonwealth Bank, and Telstra.

James Smith